Mr. SAYLOR. I may say to the gentleman from California that since he made the statement on the floor that these contracts could be renegotiated it is a position which I did not believe was possible, and therefore I think this amendment should be kept in the bill. I say that because I want to get everyone down there to pay more money, and if these contracts can be renegotiated I do not want to give the Reynolds Metal Co. or any private utility down there a handout. We have been informed up to now that they cannot be renegotiated.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE. It is my opinion that three of those contracts can. I can be in error about that, and as the gentleman knows, 50 percent of the lawyers in every situation are wrong. So rather than have any argument about it the reason we agreed to take that section out was so that this matter as well as the matter in the preceding section, namely, the adoption of the incrementation method of computing cost, could go over for further study on the assumption that the House will then adopt a one-section bill providing for a moratorium to June 30. I am not prepared to talk on the legal aspects of that, and I do not want to argue it with some of the gentlemen who are concerned in the matter, but I took it up with the author of the bill and the other sponsors of this legislation and with the Southwestern Power Administration. They are willing to leave the matter for further study and that is why I made the statement I did and suggest that the House not approve the amendment.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, after that statement by the gentleman from California I am perfectly willing to see that the amendment is dropped out.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take more than 30 seconds, but I do so in order to complete the record.

I would like the record to show that I am in favor of renegotiating all of those private contracts that can be renegotiated.

I am in favor of increasing the rates in the Reynolds Metals Co. contract to a realistic figure and I am opposed to raising the rates on the cooperatives if at the same time the rates to the private utilities can be raised and are not raised. I just wanted the record to show my position on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. I will not delay the House, but I think this is an opportune time to speak a word of warning which I hope will be noticed by the REA cooperatives in America.

Some people are raising false hopes in the minds of cooperative electric utilities for political reasons, and some people, I am convinced, are proposing that cooperatives start experimental atomic reactors for malicious reasons. There may be some who are gullible and believe the misleading information which fills our press and technical magazines with predictions of almost immediate economic power from atomic fission. Whatever the motives of these promoters may be, I wish to warn them with a warning that comes from a lifelong friend of cooperative projects. Six or seven of these cooperatives have been tentatively negotiating for the installation of experimental atomic reactors as part of the experimental reactor development program. Knowing that rural cooperatives do not have reserves of money for investment and knowing that they must borrow this money if they are to enter this highly problematical field, I just want to sound a word of warning to these cooperatives. If they undertake to enter this field, which will involve from 40 to 50, maybe a 100, million dollars to build full-scale experimental power reactors that will have any chance at all of demonstrating economic power, they are falling into a trap, whether it be by borrowing of this money or by increasing the assessment on the users of the electricity.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a field for the cooperatives to enter at this time. They had better stay out of it and let those people that have access to greater funds, or the Federal Government preferably, enter into the field of research and development of atomic reactors. They should not fall into this trap into which some people who have not been in favor of cooperatives are all too willing to push them. That is, the trap of assuming additional financial obligations that will either cause them to go into bankruptcy or be absorbed by some of the adjoining utilities, or will cause them to have to raise the rates to their cooperative customers to the point where there will be a rebellion among those cooperative customers.

The REA cooperatives or any other type of electric cooperatives should conserve their funds or credit, if they have such resources, in order to build economic reactors when and if atomic reactors are proven to be economic.

I take this time, therefore, to state this solemn warning and hope it will be brought to the attention of the cooperatives and that they will tread lightly and sail slowly on this dangerous sea.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects pursuant to House Resolution 625, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 140, answered "present" 1, not voting 90, as follows:

WORK OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DURING 84TH CONGRESS

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am submitting a statement giving in detail the activities of the House District Committee during the 84th Congress including the 1st and 2d sessions. I realize that some of the bills are at the White House awaiting the President's signature and it is possible that the Senate may pass some additional House bills before we adjourn. However, I wanted to submit the enclosed statement so the House Members would have an opportunity to review the activities of my committee.

The members of my committee have spent a great deal of time in an effort to solve the problems of our Nation's Capital and keep it one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Congress appropriated approximately $200 million for additional Federal buildings in the metropolitan area which is, in my opinion, a great deal more than all the States combined have received for new post office buildings during the past 2 years.

During the past 18 years I have attended practically every District Committee meeting. When I first became a member of the House District Committee, the chairman had regular scheduled meetings every Monday during the session of Congress. However, in order to conserve time, during the past 2 years, we have scheduled regular meetings once each month with the understanding that additional meetings could be called at the request of the chairman. I take great pride in being able to be of some assistance to my Nation's Capital. However, I do not always receive the cooperation that a committee chairman should receive when he is performing a duty placed upon him which has no bearing on the district he represents.

STATEMENT OF THE CHAIRMAN OF THE HOUSE DISTRICT COMMITTEE, HON. JOHN L. McMILLAN

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress 147 bills and resolutions were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Of this number 127 were House bills and 20 were Senate bills. A total of 15 House bills and 12 Senate bills were reported favorably to the House. Of these bills 17 have become public law, 1 is private law, and 4 bills passed the House and are pending in the Senate. Five bills were reported from the committee but action was taken on the Senate companion bills on the floor of the House.

During the 2d session of the 84th Congress 89 bills and resolutions were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Of this number, 73 were House bills and 16 were Senate bills. A total of 39 House bills and 10 Senate bills were reported favorably to the House. Of these bills 18 have become public law, 5 are private laws, and there are 8 bills that have passed the House and are pending in the Senate. One of these bills was reported by the Senate District Committee but failed to pass the Senate. There are 14 bills awaiting Presidential signature, 1 bill in conference, 1 bill pending on House Calendar, 1 bill that was reported by the House District Committee but was recommitted, and 1 bill that passed the House, passed by the Senate, with amendments, and sent back to the House.

During the 84th Congress a total of 55 House bills and 22 Senate bills were reported from the committee favorably. Of this number 35 have become public law, 6 are private laws, 12 House bills are pending in the Senate and there are 14 bills awaiting Presidential signature. One bill is in conference, 1 bill pending on House Calendar, 1 bill that was recommitted and 1 bill that passed the House, passed the Senate amended, and returned to the House.

The most important piece of legislation to come out of the committee was the revenue bill, H. R. 9770, Public Law 460. Extensive hearings were held on the bill, H. R. 8168, to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was introduced on January 5, 1956. These hearings were held on January 11, 16 and 17. After the completion of these public hearings many executive meetings of the committees and their staff members were held, and a new bill, H. R. 9770, was introduced on March 6, 1956. The bill was approved on March 31, 1956, Public Law 460. It is expected that the District of Columbia will derive additional revenue for the fiscal year 1957 in the amount of $9,812,000 and for the fiscal year 1958, and thereafter, additional revenue in the amount of $11,812,000.

INTERSTATE SANITATION COMMISSION—COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), I return herewith House Joint Resolution 511, joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut to confer certain additional powers upon the Interstate Sanitation Commission, established by said States pursuant to Public Resolution 62, 74th Congress, August 27, 1935.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 27, 1956.

AUTHORIZING CONVEYANCE OF TRIBAL LANDS FROM THE SHOSHONE INDIAN TRIBE AND THE ARAPAHOE INDIAN TRIBE OF THE WIND RIVER RESERVATION IN WYOMING TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speakers' desk the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ENGLE, HALEY, and MILLER of Nebraska.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days in which to extend their remarks on the bill S. 3338 just passed and to include pertinent material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may have until midnight tomorrow night to file additional views in connection with the legislative oversight functions of the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives and that the additional views be printed with the committee report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

FARWELL UNIT, NEBRASKA

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 610 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7435) to reauthorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of Farwell unit, Nebraska, of the Missouri River Basin project. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minue rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH], and now yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 610 makes in order the consideration of H. R. 7435, a bill to reauthorize the construction of the Farwell unit, Nebraska, of the Missouri River Basin project.

The resolution provides for an open rule and 1 hour of general debate on the bill.

The Farwell project was originally authorized by the act of December 22, 1944. Investigations subsequent to the original authorization have resulted in a major change of planning, making it desirable that reauthorization be obtained.

The project will provide water for the irrigation of 52,530 acres of land in central Nebraska. The estimated cost is $30,534,000, of which $29,348,100 is allocated to irrigation and is fully reimbursable. One million one hundred eighty-five thousand and nine hundred dollars is allocated to flood control, fish and wildlife, and recreation. It is estimated that the water users can repay $11,860,000 over a 40-year period and the remainder of the construction costs would be derived from other revenues of the Missouri River Basin project.

I urge the adoption of this resolution so the House may proceed to the consideration of H. R. 7435.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that many Members have left the floor since the last rollcall and that there is not a quorum present at this time.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

AMENDING THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933 TO PROTECT THE SMALL INVESTOR

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss a subject which is very close to your heart and concerns every investor in the United States.

Over 20 years ago, you were the author of the Securities Act of 1933. The principal objective of this act was to protect investors by requiring adequate and accurate disclosure regarding securities publicly offered for sale in interstate commerce or through the use of the mails. A second important aim was to create a mechanism for compelling such disclosure. A third cardinal principle upon which the act is erected is that all those responsible for statements, upon the basis of which the public is solicited to invest its money, shall be held to certain minimum standards of care and diligence. To implement this principle, the act imposes certain liabilities for failure to exercise such care and diligence upon issuers, their directors, principal officers, and upon underwriters of securities publicly offered. The fourth was to outlaw fraud in the sale of all securities.

SMALL INVESTORS ARE NOT GETTING ADEQUATE PROTECTION

I have been greatly concerned with one provision of the Securities Act which, in the light of present conditions, needs to be greatly strengthened. I refer to the securities issued under the exemption provided in section 3 (b) of this act. The language of section 3 (b) is as follows:

> The Commission may from time to time by its rules and regulations, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed therein, add any class of securities to the securities exempted as provided in this section, if it finds that the enforcement of this title with respect to such securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors by reason of the small amount involved or the limited character of the public offering; but no issue of securities shall be exempted under this subsection where the aggregate amount at which such issue is offered to the public exceeds $300,000.

Up until 1945, the exemption under section 3 (b) was available to issues where the aggregate amount did not exceed $100,000. In 1945, the amount was raised to $300,000. In 1954 a proposal was made to increase further the exemption to $500,000. I objected to this proposal in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it was defeated. Another attempt was made to increase this exemption on the floor of the House, and you objected to it. This proposal was defeated by the House of Representatives.

The number of filings under section 3 (b) exemption are at the rate of 1,200 to 1,300 a year, and represent offerings of approximately $250 million a year. During the 10-year period from July 1, 1945 through June 30, 1955, the aggregate amount of the proposed offerings was $2,052,181,000. Surely, you can see that this is no small matter. I have given very careful consideration to the administration of section 3 (b) by the Securities and Exchange Commission. My study has led me to believe that the administration of this provision of the law has been very inadequate for the protection of investors in small issues. Such investors are being imposed upon by many unscrupulous promoters who take advantage of the loopholes in the Commission's regulations with respect to small issues to defraud small investors.

Who are these investors in exempted securities? Chiefly, they are the average rank and file citizens—the store clerk, the factory worker, the railroad man. They are the ones who need the greatest protection for their investments. Yet, strange to say, the law provides for them lesser protection than is afforded to investors in registered securities. These individuals do not have thousands of dollars to purchase General Motors stock, or A. T. & T. At most, they have a few hundred dollars to invest, and so they are attracted to the low-priced, highly speculative issues, such as uranium stock, which sells for five or ten cents per share. Little do they realize that in buying such speculative securities they get inferior protection under the law as compared to investors in registered securities.

Wherein do investors in securities exempted under section 3 (b) get less protection under the Securities Act than investors in securities which are registered under this act?

As I stated earlier, section 3 (b) gives the SEC authority to issue rules and regulations prescribing terms and conditions under which an exemption from the registration requirements of the act may be granted. For many years prior to 1953, the rules and regulations issued by the Commission with respect to these offerings, known as regulation A, were very simple and required very little information. All the issuer of such securities had to do was to file a letter with the SEC's regional office, and answer a few simple questions. All this information could be supplied in 5 or 10 minutes, at most. Five days after the filing of this letter, the issuer was permitted to offer his securities to the public up to $100,000 prior to May 15, 1945, and up to $300,000 since that date. No selling literature of any kind was required to be offered to the prospective investor.

What happened to the investors in exempted securities as a result of the lax regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission? As the hearings before the Heller Subcommittee in the 82d Congress will show—and I was a member of that subcommittee—the Securities and Exchange Commission found that most frauds in the sale of securities took place in the promotional issues made pursuant to the section 3 (b) exemption. The subcommittee questioned Mr. Baldwin B. Bane, then the Director of the Division of Corporation Finance of the SEC with respect to these fraud cases, and this is what Mr. Bane told the subcommittee:

I think that the possibility of perpetrating fraud upon the investor is much greater under regulation A filings than it is under full registration, and the extent to which you broaden that exemptions field, you natually broaden the possibility of the investor not obtaining the protection that Congress felt he should obtain with which I agree, in the form of adequate and accurate information about the thing he is asked to buy. He certainly does not obtain that in connection with an offering under regulation A.

To that extent, he is offered much less protection. Therefore, there is much more opportunity for fraud, except as you follow it up through enforcement. There is more opportunity for him to act without this protection and there is much less opportunity for the investor to obtain the information under regulation A that he should have as provided for registered securities. * * * That is a result of what I have seen of these filings, coming up through the years; it is not guesswork, no sir. (Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, 82d Cong., 2d sess., on Powers, Duties, and Functions of the Securities and Exchange Commission, pt. I, p. 444.)

In the face of this serious situation, what did the Securities and Exchange Commission do? On April 6, 1953, it amended regulation A to require the filing of more information and to require the use of an offering circular to prospective investors. Did the SEC impose any penalties to insure that this additional information would be accurate and not misleading? No, it did not. And even today, under its rules, there is no civil liability for false and misleading statements attached to the issuer, its officers, and directors, its accountants, its attorneys, and other experts.

Now, I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, what is the use of placing in the offering circular the statements of experts, and others who lend weight to an offering when there is no liability attached to these individuals in case they should make false and misleading statements?

The imposition of civil penalties for false and misleading statements is a cardinal principle in registered issues which the Congress wrote into the law, and it is known as section 11 of the Securities Act of 1933. Section 11 provides a civil remedy to all purchasers of registered securities against the issuer, every person who signed the registration statement, the directors, underwriters, and experts named in the registration statement, if such statement contained any false or misleading statements or omissions.

The importance of section 11 was recognized by the SEC many, many times. In its Tenth Annual Report to the Congress, the Commission stated with respect to section 11, as follows:

This latter sanction against practically all persons concerned in the distribution of a security is one of the most important of implements in carrying out the policy of the act, since it results in a concerted effort on the part of all concerned to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of the securities offered. (Tenth Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission, 1945, p. 20.)

More recently, I questioned Mr. Byron D. Woodside, Director of the Division of Corporation Finance of the SEC, on the importance of section 11. Here is what Mr. Woodside told the committee:

We have always contended and argued that section 11 was an important prophylactic in connection with the sale of securities to the public. I think you can find testimony in the past to the effect the Commission has considered that has been a very important aspect of the statutory pattern in securing a fair disclosure and holding people responsible for the sale of an issue to account for fair and accurate information. There is no argument there. * * *

The man who is likely to be liable personally under section 11 is perhaps going to be a little more careful than if he is not liable. (Hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, 84th Cong., 1st sess., on H. R. 5701, p. 83.)

In spite of this strong endorsement of the principle involved in section 11 of the act, which is designed to protect investors, the present members of the Securities and Exchange Commission, strange to say, have strenuously fought the application of this same principle to securities which are exempted under section 3 (b) of the act.

MY BILLS WOULD GIVE MORE PROTECTION TO SMALL INVESTORS

In the light of these conditions, early last year I introduced a bill, H. R. 5701, the purpose of which is to abolish completely the exemption under section 3 (b). The effect of this bill would be to require all issuers of securities to register their public offerings, whether the aggregate amount is under or over $300,000. In other words, all offerings of securities would be placed or the same footing and the investor in such securities would get equal protection of the law.

A subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held hearings on my bill H. R. 5701 in Washington, D. C., Denver, Colo., Salt Lake City, Utah, and New York City. Many of the witnesses who testified before the subcommittee stated that they could see no reason why an investor in securities issued under section 3 (b) should get lesser protection than investors in registered issues. Included among those who favored an amendment to the Securities Act to provide additional protection to investors in exemption securities are representatives of the American Federation of Labor, and the Congress of Industrial Organizations; the attorney general of the State of New York, the securities commissioner of the State of Utah, and many attorneys and securities dealers.

Mr. Edward T. McCormick, president of the American Stock Exchange, who was a distinguished member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, spoke out very strongly in favor of this legislation. Here is what Mr. McCormick said in response to my questions:

My understanding of the historical development of section 3 (b) was that it was in fact to be an exemption. There were certain companies that could take their first step with some small sum, it was originally $100,000 in the law, and the SEC under its rulemaking power did exempt offerings of $30,000 and under.

In other words, you did not have to do anything with the SEC. You just sold the $30,000, and you had an exemption. Now, that, I think, was following what the Congress had in mind when it adopted 3 (b). However, gradually there has evolved a regulation which is basically a prospectus requirement today, very similar to that required of an issue of $400,000, so that to my mind they now have merely used 3 (b) as a basis for classifying securities. The fact of the matter is, I think, that 3 (b) is a dead letter so far as the original intent of Congress is concerned. * * *

I think as a matter of fact, as I say, the requirements (of filing under regulation A) now are so great that in effect you have merely classified the type of prospectus that is wanted for small business. The only basic difference, of course, is the one that you have alluded to so often, that is that they automatically get the exemption from section 11, which liabilities apply only to material contained in a registration statement.

Frankly, as I said earlier, the way I understand the original concept of 3 (b), they did not think they were going to have accountants and geologists and things of that sort, and that in a small proposition the seller would be subject to all of the civil liabilities of section 12 and the criminal liabilities of section 17. They thought this provided adequate protection.

Now, if the requirements of the SEC have come to the point where issuers are actually employing experts, there is absolutely no logic in saying, 'if he sells under $300,000, the buyer does not have the right to sue those experts, but if he sells $400,000 he does.' That is just sheer nonsense. * * *

I think one of the mot important legal steps taken at the time of the enactment of the 1933 act was the creation of section 11 to cover such individuals, and I certainly think that if those individuals are involved in the selling of securities under regulation A they should be equally liable. (Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, on Promotional Securities, November 2, 1955, p. 501.)

During the hearings last year before the Commerce and Finance Subcommittee, a number of witnesses expressed the opinion that the outright repeal of Section 3 (b) would impose greater expense upon the issuer of small securities by requiring full registration. It may be true that full registration in some instances would entail greater expense to the issuer, although the records of the Securities and Exchange Commission show that in the case of promotional securities the cost of flotation is approximately the same. I still feel that the possibility of some additional expense to the issuer is offset by the greater protection afforded the investor of securities. It is also offset by the fact that registered securities are admittedly more saleable and acceptable by the public. Nevertheless, in order to get an alternative bill before Congress, I introduced H. R. 9319, the purpose of which is to amend section 3 (d) to provide that responsible officers, or other persons shall be liable in damages on account of untrue statements or material omissions in statements or documents filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission as a condition of this exemption. In essence, this bill would afford to investors in securities exempted under section 3 (b) the same degree of protecton with respect to false and misleading statements that investors in registered securities now enjoy under section 11 of the act. I believe that if the exemption provided for in section 3 (b) is to remain, the investor in such securities ought to be entitled to the same protection against fraud that is accorded purchasers of registered securities.

USE OF EXEMPT PROCEDURE BY URANIUM AND OTHER PROMOTIONAL COMPANIES

One of the principal concerns I have with respect to securities issued pursuant to the section 3 (b) exemption is the large use which is being made of it by uranium mining companies. Beginning with May 1954, a large increase took place in filings under regulation A by uranium companies. In the 12 months preceding this month, fewer than 10 issues were filed during any 1 month, and the aggregate amount during the month was less than $2 million. In May of 1954, 16 issues were filed with an aggregate dollar amount of $3,510,000. In subsequent months, the number of filings fluctuated, but were in excess of the May total. In October 1954, 43 issues were filed having an aggregate dollar value of $8,179,000. These uranium stocks, selling at 5 cents or 10 cents a share, have been foisted upon the public without disclosing to them fully and adequately what they were buying and without giving them the full protection of the Securities Act. The overwhelming majority of these issues have proved to be a total loss to the investing public. The people who got hurt mostly are the small investors who are unable to purchase the high-priced stocks.

A startling feature of these uranium stock promotions is the high cost of floating these securities and the large stock options taken by the promoters of such deals. I have examined a good number of uranium offering circulars and find that the underwriting commissions and discounts go as high as 33⅓ percent of the gross proceeds, with the large proportion of such offerings providing underwriting commissions and discounts of 20 percent or more. In addition, most of these offerings allow the underwriters cash expenses up to $25,000, and liberal stock options. In the case of 27 out of 33 uranium stock issues which I examined, the public would contribute between 90 and 100 percent of the cash but get only between 37½ percent and 95.2 percent of the total stock of the companies. In the case of 10 of these companies, the public would get less than 60 percent of the stockholdings of the corporation. In four of these companies, the public would get only two-thirds of the total outstanding stock in return for supplying practically all the cash.

A highly important question is: What happens to the proceeds of the sale of stock of these companies when the flotation is unsuccessful, that is, when not enough funds are raised to carry out the program for which the securities are being sold? And, as I have already indicated, most of these offerings have been unsuccessful flotations. Practically all of the uranimum promotions make no provisions for the return of any of the public's money under any circumstances. That is a shocking disclosure to me. I cannot understand why in these instances, the underwriter, and officers of the corporation should be entitled to receive all the proceeds of the sale and the investor should get nothing. It does not appear to me that the Securities and Exchange Commission has been exercising the duties delegated to it by the Congress, namely, to protect investors. The Commission can, under its rule-making powers, provide for appropriate safeguards for the protection of investors, but thus far has not seen fit to do so.

These uranium offering circulars are elegant looking brochures containing colored maps showing the locations of the mining properties on which the companies have options, and include statements of geologists, attorneys, accountants, and so forth. Little does the prospective investor realize that no liability attaches to these experts under the Securities Act for false or misleading statements. Of what value, then, are these expert opinions? What reliance can the prospective investor place on them when deciding whether or not to purchase the security?

Prof. William L. Stokes, an outstanding geologist and professor of geology at the University of Utah, told the Subcommittee on Commerce and Finance at its hearing in Salt Lake City, Utah, last fall that uranium companies can obtain practically any kind of geological report as to the value of their mining property if they will pay for it. Professor Stokes' statement is so significant that I should like to quote from part of his testimony:

> Unfortunately in the uranium boom we have many persons posing as geologists and mining engineers who are poorly qualified to do professional work. I have had students who have flunked out in their attempts to obtain bachelor's or higher degrees ask me if they were qualified to sign themselves as geologists on professional reports.
> Such poorly trained geologists have found a temporary market for their services in the uranium boom. Many companies do not desire an honest, well-done report as much as they do one which extolls the virtues of their holdings in an exaggerated manner. I have heard company officials remark that everything would be fine "if they could find a geologist who would write the kind of a report they want." Unfortunately a geologist can usually be found who will write the kind of a report needed.* * *
> Unfortunately some of the uranium companies are not seeking the best qualified technical services; they want a cheap job and a rosy report. I can say from personal experience that bribery is regarded by some as a justified means of getting the kind of report needed. I want to make it clear that the majority of companies are apparently willing to let the chips fall where they may in confidential reports but those reports that are to appear for public consumption are as far as possible free of all negative and unfavorable items. (Hearings before the Commerce and Finance Subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, September 13, 1955, p. 327.)

One may properly ask: Why does the Securities and Exchange Commission permit the use of geological reports of this character in offering circulars? Surely, they are misleading and are contrary to the interest of prospective investors.

A recent stock offering of a small loan company, the Coastal Finance Corp. of Silver Spring, Md., is another illustration of the inadequacy of the present SEC regulations to cope with false and misleading statements in offering circulars. Two of the SEC's principal officers, the Executive Director, and the Administrator of the Washington regional office, were members of the board of Coastal while in the employ of the SEC.

In the summer of 1955, Coastal Finance offered and sold, pursuant to the section 3 (b) exemption over $161,000 in common stock. Shortly thereafter, it was found that the offering circular contained false and misleading statements of material facts. In particular, it was discovered that the financial statements contained in Coastal's offering circular were false and misleading in a material way.

Yet, the offering circular contained an accountant's certificate to the effect that an examination of Coastal's accounts was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Subsequent investigation by the SEC showed, in fact, that the accounting firm had not made a field audit or examination of Coastal's branch offices. And while the accountant stated in his certification that he was an "independent accountant," the fact of the matter is that he was not at all "independent" as that term is used by the SEC.

The tragic thing about this case is that because the offering was made pursuant to the section 3 (b) exemption of the Securities Act, no civil liability attaches to the accounting firm. Investors who were misled by the rosy financial statements certified to by the accounting firm cannot sue this firm under the provisions of section 11 of this act. Not only are the accountants immune to suit for their negligence, but also the directors and officers of Coastal, under whose direction and supervision these fraudulent practices were taking place are also immune to suit under section 11. That this sort of situation should be permitted to exist is inconceivable to me. I propose to change it by my bill, H. R. 9319.

COST OF FLOTATION OF SMALL ISSUES

It has been charged by some that to enact either one of my bills, H. R. 5701, which would cancel the section 3 (b) exemption outright, or H. R. 9319, which would make section 11 applicable to offerings under section 3 (b), would increase the cost of financing and therefore be a hindrance to small business. Yet, the records of the Securities and Exchange Commission show that the cost of small flotations of issues are attributable predominantly to compensation to underwriters and distributors, and only a relatively small part is represented by other expenses, including those affected by registration requirements. All evidence that I have been able to gather indicates that the registration requirements of the Securities Act have very little to do with the high cost of floating small issues. In this connection, I should like to quote from the Tenth Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission, which so far as I know, contains the most recent information on this subject. The Securities and Exchange Commission stated:

Statistics showing the flotation costs of equity security issues of small companies during the period from January 1, 1938 to June 30, 1944 are presented in appendix table 2. There are included all common and preferred issues filed separately for primary distribution by companies having less than $5 million of assets, other than issues of investment trusts and extractive industry companies. The analysis shows that the total flotation costs of equity issues of companies reporting less than $1 million of assets amounted to 21.6 percent of the expected gross proceeds, which included 19.7 percent as compensation to underwriters and dealers and 1.9 percent for other expenses. Comparable figures for the companies reporting assets of between $1 and $5 million were 15.8 percent total flotation costs, which included 14 percent as compensation and 1.8 percent for other expenses.

Of course only a part of the "other expense" category is attributable to registration. Such expense items as issuance taxes, registrar's fees, trustee's fees, the cost of complying with State securities laws, and the cost of printing certificates and the preparation of underlying documents such as charter amendments and mortgages must be paid even though securities proposed to be offered are exempt from registration. Furthermore, even though registration were not required, there would be in most cases certain fees for legal and accounting services and expenses for the preparation of selling literature. It seems clear, therefore, that any measure designed to diminish that portion of the 1.8 or 1.9 percent "other expense" figure attributable to registration costs alone may not afford very substantial relief to enterprises that must pay in addition from 15 to 20 cents out of every dollar as commission to underwriters for selling their securities. (Tenth Annual Report of the Securities and Exchange Commission to the Congress, 1945, pp. 20, 21.)

In particular, so far as the cost of floating uranium issues is concerned, the Securities and Exchange Commission has admitted that the cost of registering such issues and the cost of floating them under the section 3 (b) exempt procedure is approximately the same—hearings before the Commerce and Finance Subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, July 21, 1955, page 95.

SUMMARY

A large segment of American investors today, principally small investors, are being solicited to invest their savings in securities which are exempted from registration under the provisions of section 3 (b) of the Securities Act of 1933. The public offerings pursuant to this exemption have been substantial, and presently amount to approximately $250 million annually. Investors in these securities are not receiving adequate protection against false and misleading statements made in the selling literature on the basis of which the public is being solicited to invest its savings.

It is for the purpose of providing the investors in exempted securities with additional protection that I introduced H. R. 5701 and H. R. 9319. H. R. 5701 would repeal the section 3 (b) exemption outright, and require all issuers to register their public offerings. H. R. 9319 would not go so far but it would impose certain liabilities on those who are responsible for making the false and misleading statements with respect to the securities being offered. The imposition of such liabilities would result in the exercise of greater care and diligence by those who prepare these statements. It would result in more accurate disclosure of information regarding the securities being offered publicly.

I believe that the prospective investor has a right to adequate and accurate information concerning the securities which he is asked to buy. I believe that Congress owes a duty to the public to see that the prospective investor gets this additional protection, which he does not now have.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, after giving very careful consideration to my bill, H. R. 9319, reported it favorably to this House. The Rules Committee also approved it and scheduled it for debate. It was due to come up today. I realize, however, that we are now in the closing hours of the session and there is not sufficient time for it to be considered by the Senate if it were passed by the House today. If I am returned to Congress, I shall reintroduce this bill and feel confident it will be enacted early in the next session.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us makes in order the consideration of a bill having to do with a reclamation project, the reauthorization of the Farwell project in Nebraska.

This project was authorized under the 1944 Flood Control Act for the Missouri River Basin; however, as the years go by the feasibility of a project changes and it has been the policy of our committee to take a new look at these projects to determine their feasibility.

The Farwell unit project will cost about $30,500,000 and it will irrigate about 58,000 acres. There is no power in the project, and it is all reimbursable with the exception of $1,185,900 allocated to flood control and wildlife and recreation.

The report says:

The economic and financial studies of the Farwell unit indicate that it is one of the more favorable and justifiable units of the Missouri River Basin project. Economic justification for the unit is demonstrated by the fact that the overall benefits exceed the costs by a ratio of 1.88 to 1.

The bill was considered fully by the committee, it has the approval of the Department of the Interior, as well as Budget Bureau approval. A similar bill has passed the other body.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. ASPINALL. I wish to join with the gentleman from Nebraska in stating that this is one of the best reclamation bills reported out of our committee this year and it should receive the support of this body.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill in reference to which a rule has just been adopted, H. R. 7435, be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object except to ask the gentleman to explain the procedure.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this procedure, I will explain to the gentleman, is to make unnecessary the use of 1 hour's time as provided in the rule by going into the Whole House on the State of the Union. We read the bill under the 5-minute rule, just as we would if we were in the Whole House on the State of the Union. The bill will be subject to consideration under the 5-minute rule and everybody will have a chance to talk. I propose to speak for 5 minutes, I assume the gentleman will, on pro forma amendments and other types of amendment. It is an expediting procedure. The only difference is that it will require 218 Members to be present for a quorum rather than 100.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3594) to reauthorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of Farwell unit, Nebraska, of the Missouri River Basin project, an identical bill to the House bill, be considered in lieu of H. R. 7435.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authorization for construction, operation, and maintenance of the Farwell unit of the Missouri River Basin project contained in section 9 (c) of the act of December 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 887), as amended and supplemented, is hereby amended to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance of works to furnish irrigation water for approximately 52,500 acres of land in Howard, Sherman, and Valley Counties, Nebraska. The principal works of said unit shall consist of a reservoir at or near the Sherman site, works for the diversion of water from the Middle Loup River and its delivery to said reservoir, and necessary pumping facilities, canals, drains, and related works. There shall also be included as a part of the Farwell unit such watershed management and channel works as are necessary to provide channel stability in the light of the anticipated application of irrigation water to the lands involved and appropriate portions of the costs of constructing, operating, and maintaining such works shall be allocated to irrigation and returned in the same manner and under the same conditions as other irrigation costs of the Missouri River Basin project: Provided, That any contract entered into under section 9, subsection (d), of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 1187, 1193, 43 U. S. C., sec. 485 (h)) for payment of those portions of the costs of constructing, operating, and maintaining the Farwell unit which are allocated to irrigation and assigned to be repaid by the contracting organization may provide for the repayment of the portion of the construction cost assigned to any project contract unit or, if the contract unit be divided into two or more irrigation blocks, to any such block over the period specified in said section 9 (d) or as near thereto as is consistent with the adoption and operation of a variable payment formula which, being based on full repayment within the period stated under normal conditions, permits variance in the required annual payments in the light of economic factors pertinent to the ability of the organization to pay. The Farwell unit shall be integrated, physically and financially, with the other Federal works in the Missouri River Basin constructed or authorized to be constructed under the comprehensive plan approved by section 9 of the act of December 22, 1944, as amended and supplemented. The Secretary is authorized to transfer to the Department of Agriculture from funds available for construction of the Farwell unit such sums as are reasonably required to construct necessary water management and channel works as hereinbefore provided.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

H. R. 7435 was laid on the table.

CROOKED RIVER FEDERAL RECLAMATION PROJECT, OREGON

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 605 and ask for its immediate consideration.

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7726) to authorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH], and yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution makes in order the consideration of H. R. 7726 authorizing the construction of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon, and provides for an open rule and 1 hour of general debate on the bill.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs reported this bill with amendments. The bill proposes the construction of a dam and storage reservoir at Prineville, Oreg., a diversion dam and canal, related pumping plants, conduits and other facilities to furnish water to irrigate approximately 20,000 acres of land in Crook County, Oreg., and, in addition, furnish flood protection, make available an estimated 51,200 acre-feet of water annually for other lands in the area, benefit fish and wildlife and enhance recreational opportunities.

The estimated construction cost of the project is $6,598,000. It is estimated that the water users to be served by the project can repay $2,299,000 over a 50-year period and the bill provides that the remainder of the irrigation allocation of $5,903,000 be repaid from surplus revenues derived from the power operations of the Dalles Dam powerplant.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution No. 605 makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 7726, which provides for the authorization of a very small but sorely needed reclamation project in Oregon. By "small" I mean the total cost is in the neighborhood of $6 million, all but $600,000 of which, I believe, will be repaid.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. COON], to further explain the bill.

Mr. COON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on behalf of my Crooked River reclamation bill. It proposes to furnish irrigation water to approximately 20,000 acres of land in Crook County, Oreg. It would also provide needed flood-control protection, plus recreation and fish and wildlife benefits.

This worthwhile project is greatly desired by residents of the locality. A dozen of them flew here from Oregon to testify before House and Senate subcommittees in favor of Crooked River legislation. Their well presented testimony made a fine impression. They pointed out that development of the project will fill an economic gap which otherwise may occur in the area. This may result from a decrease in sawmill activity as the timber cut in the area diminishes.

Resolutions favoring the project have been adopted by the Prineville-Crook County Chamber of Commerce, by similar organizations in Bend, Redmond, and Madras, and by the Prineville Chamber of Commerce. The area seems united in support of it. It is vital to its economic future.

Approximately half of the acreage which would receive water from the project is now nonirrigated. The balance receives an inadequate supply of irrigation water. This is cattle-raising country. A high percentage of well-irrigated land is seeded to alfalfa and other grasses for hay and forage. Wheat and other small grain plantings are concentrated on dry land, and on land which receives inadequate amounts of irrigation water. Besides the water for the 20,000 acres, an additional 51,200 acre-feet would be available for future use elsewhere in the area.

The principal structure proposed is the Prineville Dam. This would be a rock-fill structure with an impervious earth core. It would be 170 feet high and 700 feet in length at its crest. The reservoir behind it would have a capacity of more than 150,000 acre-feet. There would be a diversion dam and a diversion canal, plus necessary pumping and distribution works. The project would utilize the existing Ochoco Dam and Reservoir and an existing distribution system based on it.

Flood-control protection would be provided for Prineville, the county seat of Crook County, and for the agricultural bottom lands along the Crooked River. These are now subject to floods. Only a quick freeze saved Prineville from a real flood last winter, when heavy rains came on top of rapidly melting snow. The normal rainfall in the area is not enough for sustained crop production without irrigation.

Public-spirited citizens in Crook County have been waiting for this project and working for it for a long time. An identical bill has already passed the Senate at this session. I sincerely hope for a favorable vote here on this measure which will be of so much benefit.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLE. The benefit-to-cost ratio in this project is 2 to 1; is it not?

Mr. COON. It is approximately 2 to 1.

Mr. ENGLE. And the bill is cosponsored on the other side by the two United States Senators from the State of Oregon; is that correct?

Mr. COON. That is correct. It passed the Senate some time ago.

Mr. ENGLE. And presently before the House is the bill offered by the gentleman who now has the time?

Mr. COON. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. KING of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KING of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says that there will be 20,000 acres coming into production by reason of this expenditure for irrigation facilities. Does the gentleman know of anything that is grown in Oregon that we are not already growing enough of in this country?

Mr. COON. We are not growing enough hay and pasture for the cattle that we have out there. This would permit them to raise more hay and pasture for the cattle which they are trying to raise.

Mr. KING of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean there are not enough cattle in this country?

Mr. COON. I did not say that, but when you do have cattle, you want to take care of them properly, and this will help to do that.

Mr. KING of Pennsylvania. I should like to comment, as the last word I utter in the Congress, that such projects as this and the last one we just passed are just silly.

Mr. COON. Mr. Speaker, I do not happen to agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether this project has been approved by the conservation groups of that area of the country and whether it will have any effect on wildlife and the preservation of forest areas?

Mr. COON. We have had information from the wildlife people in Oregon, and they say that this is approved by the national Izaak Walton League of America.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House consider the bill (H. R. 7726) on which the rule has just been granted in the House as in Committee of the Whole, as we did the preceding bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7726) to authorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7726, with Mr. SISK in the chair.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ASPINALL], chairman of the Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Chairman, this is another one of the smaller reclamation projects which have been studied this year and presented to the committee for its consideration. This is one of the better projects, although it is small, it having a benefit-cost ratio of 2 to 1. The Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation visited the area to be served by this project last November. The area is in need of the water which will be provided by this project. It will help firm up the agriculture and livestock economy. It will not produce any appreciable amount of farm products which are in surplus at the present time. Most of the livestock and agricultural products produced at the present time on the lands to be embraced in the project and those to be produced on this project area in the future when the project is constructed will be used right in the area where they are produced. The area is largely a livestock area.

The project will cost $6,598,000, of which there are allocations to irrigation of $5,903,000, of $653,000 to flood control, of $29,000 to fish and wildlife, and of $13,000 to recreation. The last three items, of course, will be nonreimbursable, but that allocated to irrigation, $5,903,000, is entirely repayable under the reclamation law. Of that amount an appreciable sum will be paid out of the net revenues from the power project at the dam. This project will pay out within a 50-year period. The net revenues from the power dam which are to be used for repayment of irrigation allocations, beyond the ability of the irrigators to repay, could be paid in full, within a period of 123 days, from the power revenues produced by the power facilities of the Dalles project.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPINALL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it not a fact that the land in its present state is practically worthless?

Mr. ASPINALL. I would not say it is practically worthless but it does not support the agricultural and livestock economy that is presently there.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In other words, in order to make the land at least self-sustaining, you have to have more water? Is that a fact?

Mr. ASPINALL. That is right. Approximately one-half of this water is for supplemental water uses, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASPINALL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman from California what this land is worth?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know what it is worth. I have been there and looked at the land, but I do not know what it is worth. It is very, very poor land. It raises few if any crops.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman must have something to go on if he even suggests it is practically worthless.

Mr. ASPINALL. May I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman meant that in the present condition it was not supporting the economy of the people who are presently residing in that area.

Mr. GROSS. We have land in the State of Iowa that with $9 and $10 hogs you cannot live on, either.

Mr. ASPINALL. I admit that. If the gentleman will come in with a reclamation project, I will help him out.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. GREEN].

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will today approve the Crooked River reclamation project and bring to a successful conclusion the years of effort the people of this area have spent to achieve this goal. There are over 9,000 people in Crook County; by 1975 population will probably rise as high as 15,000. Starting in 1916, these people have labored to provide, through their own efforts, adequate water for their arid farmland. Many of these farms represent the labors of several generations; through flood and drought, against all the difficulties their irrigation district has faced, they have worked to preserve and build up their farms. The Crooked River project means, to these people, assurance that their labors will not be lost, that for the future they can hope for adequate water and protection from the flood waters of the Crooked River.

The Crooked River valley depends on agriculture and lumbering for its livelihood. But the lumbering industry is contracting as the timber is cut off which means the valley must increasingly depend on agriculture. Without water, they must necessarily turn to wheat, for a cash crop, even though wheat is a surplus commodity. With water they can raise cattle and the necessary feed for cattle, as well as truck products. With adequate water, they can expand their operations to meet the anticipated pressure of population and the economy of the area can progress in stability.

The Crooked River project will supply water to 9,900 acres which are not now irrigated and to 10,220 acres which now have an inadequate supply. It will provide an additional 51,000 acre-feet against future irrigation needs. Annual benefits will exceed costs by more than 2 to 1. This is a modest investment to make in the welfare of the Crooked River Valley. It is a small investment to make in the future of this area. This bill has already been passed by the Senate, with the able sponsorship of Senator MORSE and Senator NEUBERGER. The words of the leading citizens of Crook County, who told the Interior Committee in eloquent and solid testimony what this project means to their community are a convincing proof of its importance. I hope this House will approve the Crooked River project and make possible its early construction.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of furnishing water for the irrigation of arid and semiarid lands (including approximately 20,000 acres of land in Crook County, Oreg.), and for other beneficial purposes, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain the Crooked River Federal reclamation project. The principal new works of the said project shall include a dam and storage reservoir at or near the Prineville site, a diversion dam and canal below said reservoir, and related pumping plants, canals, conduits, drains, and other facilities. The operation of said works shall be integrated with the operation of the existing Ochoco Dam and Reservoir and of the Government-owned generator in the Cove powerplant of the Pacific Power & Light Co., which works shall, for the purpose of this act, be considered as works of the Crooked River project.

SEC. 2. In constructing, operating, and maintaining the Crooked River project, the Secretary shall be governed by the Federal reclamation laws (act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto), except that (1) any contract entered into under section 9, subsection (d), of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 1187, 1193; 43 U. S. C., sec.

485h) for payment of those portions of the costs of constructing, operating, and maintaining the project which are allocated to irrigation and assigned to be paid by the contracting organization shall provide for the repayment of the portion of the construction cost of the project assigned to any contract unit or, if the contract unit be divided into two or more blocks, to any such block over a period of not more than 50 years (exclusive of any permissible development period) or as near thereto as is consistent with the adoption and operation of a variable payment formula which, being based on full repayment within the said period under average conditions, permits variance in the required annual payments in the light of economic factors pertinent to the ability of the organization to pay; (2) upon inclusion in the repayment contract of the Ochoco Irrigation District of an obligation to repay, in accordance with the terms of the contract and in addition to that portion of the cost of constructing the new works of the project which is otherwise assigned to be paid by the district and to its present construction charge obligation as set out in its contract with the United States dated April 24, 1950 (which obligation may, if the district so elects, be merged with and paid under the same conditions as other obligations undertaken by it under this act), an amount equal to the face value of its outstanding bonds held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and accrued interest, if any, the obligation of the district to the Corporation shall be deemed fully discharged, the bonds shall be returned to the debtor for cancellation, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereafter request that there be transferred, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be transferred, on the books of the Treasury to the account of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from moneys appropriated for carrying on the functions of the Bureau of Reclamation and available for constructing the Crooked River project a sum equal to the face value of the bonds and accrued interest, as aforesaid; (3) that portion of the cost of constructing the new works of the project which is allocated to irrigation but is beyond the ability of the water users to pay shall be charged to and returnable to the reclamation fund from net revenues derived by the Secretary of the Interior from his sale of power from the Dalles project, Oregon, which are over and beyond the amounts required to amortize the power investment therein, as provided in section 5 of the act of December 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 887, 890; 16 U. S. C., sec. 825s), and to return interest on the unamortized balance of said investment; and (4) construction of any of the new works herein authorized shall not be commenced until the Secretary shall have certified to the Congress, in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 31, 1953 (57 Stat. 261, 266), that an adequate soil survey and land classification of not less than 20,000 acres of land to be served by the project has been made and that those lands are susceptible to the production of agricultural crops by means of irrigation or that their susceptibility to the sustained production of agricultural crops by means of irrigation has been demonstrated in practice. Those costs of constructing the project which are properly allocable to flood control and to the preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife as provided in existing law, and the like costs of operating and maintaining the same shall be nonreturnable and nonreimbursable under the reclamation laws.

On page 3, line 2, after the semicolon, strike out all down to and including line 24 and insert:

"(2) the construction charge obligation of the Ochoco Irrigation District set out in its contract with the United States dated April 24, 1950, may, if the district so elects, be merged with and paid under the same conditions as other obligations undertaken by it under this act."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to use the 5 minutes but I would like to ask a question or two. What is the total cost of this project, if I may ask?

Mr. ASPINALL. The estimated cost of construction of the project is $6,598,000.

Mr. GROSS. And I understood someone to say that is just one of these small projects?

Mr. ASPINALL. All that the gentleman from Colorado wishes to say is that taking into comparison the project which this House was good enough to give support to, and in which the gentleman himself was interested, it is very small.

Mr. GROSS. I have to say to the gentleman that $6½ million is still quite a little bit of money in the part of the country I come from. We do not often see that much money for a dam or some other project or free bridge or something of that kind. You are bringing 20,000 acres into production?

Mr. ASPINALL. That is not exactly right. If I remember, 20,000 acres will be immediately served by the project comprised of 9,980 acres of dry land and 10,220 acres of land now inadequately served.

Mr. GROSS. Yes, but you are going to make good producing land out of 20,000 acres, that is approximately correct?

Mr. ASPINALL. That is correct—and it is needed in the area.

Mr. GROSS. And there will be products grown which will come into competition with our surpluses produced in the Middle West?

Mr. ASPINALL. Not in any appreciable amount.

Mr. GROSS. Well, you are going to raise cattle out there and corn and I know back home we raise plenty of both in the Middle West and you will be producing competing crops?

Mr. COON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. COON. We raise mostly feeder cattle out there and send them back to Iowa to be finished on your good corn in that area.

Mr. GROSS. That is just feeder cattle?

Mr. COON. Mostly feeder cattle; yes.

Mr. GROSS. I will say to the gentleman from Oregon that I expect a lot of those cattle will never see the State of Iowa, but they will probably hit a packinghouse long before they get to the State of Iowa.

Mr. COON. Many of our good, fine cattle go to the State of Iowa to be finished on corn there.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman tell me how many more of these bills providing for the construction of dams and bringing more land into production we are going to get in this session?

Mr. COON. I cannot answer that. I am sorry, sir.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Committee amendment: On page 4, line 19, strike out "(57 Stat. 261, 266)," and insert "(67 Stat. 261, 266)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Can the Chair advise us what bills are coming over from the Senate for further consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is sorry not to be able to advise the gentleman.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary is authorized, in connection with the Crooked River project, to construct minimum basic public recreational facilities and to arrange for the operation and maintenance of the same by an appropriate State or local agency or organization. The cost of such facilities shall be nonreturnable and nonreimbursable under the Federal reclamation laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

SEC. 4. In order to promote the preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife in accordance with section 2 of the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1080, 16 U. S. C., sec. 661a), an appropriate screen and fish ladder shall be provided at the diversion canal headworks of the Crooked River project below Prineville Reservoir and a minimum release of 10 cubic feet per second shall be maintained from said reservoir for the benefit of downstream fish-life during those months when there is no other discharge therefrom, but this release may be reduced for brief temporary periods by the Secretary whenever he may find that release of the full 10 cubic feet per second is harmful to the primary purpose of the project."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $6,339,000 for construction of the new works of the Crooked River project, plus such amounts, if any, as may be required by reason of changes in the cost of construction work of the types involved therein as shown by engineering indices and, in addition thereto, such sums as may be required to operate and maintain said project.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

Page 6, line 4, strike out "4" and insert "5."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SISK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7726) to authorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon, pursuant to House Resolution 625, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3101) to authorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon, an identical Senate bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of furnishing water for the irrigation of arid and semiarid lands (including approximately 20,000 acres of land in Crook County, Oreg.) and for other beneficial purposes, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain the Crooked River Federal reclamation project. The principal new works of the said project shall include a dam and storage reservoir at or near the Prineville site, a diversion dam and canal below said reservoir, and related pumping plants, canals, conduits, drains, and other facilities. The operation of said works shall be integrated with the operation of the existing Ochoco Dam and Reservoir and of the Government-owned generator in the Cove powerplant of the Pacific Power & Light Co., which works shall, for the purpose of this act, be considered as works of the Crooked River project.

SEC. 2. In constructing, operating, and maintaining the Crooked River project, the Secretary shall be governed by the Federal reclamation laws (act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto), except that (1) any contract entered into under section 9, subsection (d), of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 1187, 1193; 43 U. S. C., sec. 485h) for payment of those portions of the costs of constructing, operating, and maintaining the project which are allocated to irrigation and assigned to be paid by the contracting organization shall provide for the repayment of the portion of the construction cost of the project assigned to any contract unit or, if the contract unit be divided into two or more blocks, to any such block over a period of not more than 50 years (exclusive of any permissible development period) or as near thereto as is consistent with the adoption and operation of a variable payment formula which, being based on full repayment within the said period under average conditions, permits variance in the required annual payments in the light of economic factors pertinent to the ability of the organization to pay; (2) the construction charge obligation of the Ochoco Irrigation District set out in its contract with the United States dated April 24, 1950, may, if the district so elects, be merged with and paid under the same conditions as other obligations undertaken by it under this act; (3) that portion of the cost of constructing the new works of the project which is allocated to irrigation but is beyond the ability of the water users to pay shall be charged to and returnable to the reclamation fund from net revenues derived by the Secretary of the Interior from his sale of power from the Dalles project, Oregon, which are over and beyond the amounts required to amortize the power investment therein, as provided in section 5 of the act of December 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 887, 890; 16 U. S. C., sec. 825s), and to return interest on the unamortized balance of said investment; and (4) construction of any of the new works herein authorized shall not be commenced until the Secretary shall have certified to the Congress, in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 31, 1953 (67 Stat. 261, 266), that ah adequate soil survey and land classification of not less than 20,000 acres of land to be served by the project has been made and that those lands are susceptible to the production of agricultural crops by means of irrigation or that their susceptibility to the sustained production of agricultural crops by means of irrigation has been demonstrated in practice. Those costs of constructing the project which are properly allocable to flood control and to the preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife as provided in existing law, and the like costs of operating and maintaining the same shall be nonreturnable and nonreimbursable under the reclamation laws.

SEC. 3. The Secretary is authorized, in connection with the Crooked River project, to construct minimum basic public recreational facilities and to arrange for the operation and maintenance of the same by an appropriate State or local agency or organization. The cost of such facilities shall be nonreturnable and nonreimbursable under the Federal reclamation laws.

SEC. 4. In order to promote the preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife in accordance with section 2 of the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1080, 16 U. S. C., sec. 661a), an appropriate screen and fish ladder shall be provided at the diversion canal headworks of the Crooked River project below Prineville Reservoir and a minimum release of 10 cubic feet per second shall be maintained from said reservoir for the benefit of downtown fish life during those months when there is no other discharge therefrom, but this release may be reduced for brief temporary periods by the Secretary whenever he may find that release of the full 10 cubic feet per second is harmful to the primary purpose of the project.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $6,339,000 for construction of the new works of the Crooked River project, plus such amounts, if any, as may be required by reason of changes in the cost of construction work of the types involved therein as shown by engineering indices and, in addition thereto, such sums as may be required to operate and maintain said project.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and similar House bill (H. R. 7726) were laid on the table.

AMENDING TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 10177) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that certain lathes used for the shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing may be imported into the United States free of duty.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 12, after "act", insert "and prior to the expiration of 2 years after such date."

After line 12, insert:

"Section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting after 'linseed oil,' wherever it appears the following: 'or printing papers, coated or uncoated,'."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to suspend for 2 years the import duties on certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing, and to permit substitution for drawback purposes in the case of printing papers."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, one Senate amendment provides a 2-year limit with respect to the free entry of these lathes. The House bill did not contain any time limitation.

Another Senate amendment relates to substitution of printing papers for drawback purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 10177 was a bill introduced by myself which simply provides that certain lathes used for shoe-last roughing or for shoe-last finishing may be imported into the United States free of duty. It will be recalled that my bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means and was passed unanimously by the House. The bill has now been amended by the other body to limit its applicability for 2 years. There is no objection to this amendment.

Another amendment was also added by the other body which contains the substance of a bill introduced on this side by my distinguished friend and colleague, Representative SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The bill to which I refer is H. R. 12240. The Senate amendment, like his bill, amends section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to allow substitution of printing papers for drawback purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I join the chairman of my committee in urging the House to concur in these amendments.

AMENDING TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 9396) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place guar seed on the free list.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

After line 5, insert:

"The amendment made by this section shall apply only in the case of articles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date of enactment of this act and prior to the expiration of 2 years after such date."

After line 5, insert:

"SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph 1774 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U. S. C. 1201, par. 1774), is amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 1774. Altars, pulpits, communion tables, baptismal fonts, shrines, mosaics, or parts of any of the foregoing, and statuary (except casts of plaster of paris, or of compositions of paper or papier mache), imported in good faith for the use of, either by order of or for presentation (without charge) to, any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious purposes.'

"(b) This section shall apply to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on or after the date of enactment of this section, and to mosaics covered by entries or withdrawals which have not been liquidated or the liquidation of which has not become final on such date of enactment."

After line 5, insert:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to admit free of duty any stained glass or any prefabricated panels consisting of stained glass set in reinforced concrete with fastening devices which may be imported within the 12-month period commencing on the date of enactment of this act for use in the construction of a new sanctuary and auxiliary buildings for the First Presbyterian Church of Stamford, Conn."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments are as follows:

First, the Senate placed a 2-year limitation on the exemption for guar seed.

Second, an amendment provides for the free entry of certain mosaics designed for use of religious institutions. Our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MACHROWICZ] introduced H. R. 11035 on this same subject. That bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and unanimously passed the House. This Senate amendment merely embodies the provisions of that House bill.

Third, an amendment provides for the free entry of certain stained glass or panels for the use in construction of the First Presbyterian Church of Stamford, Conn. Our colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORANO] introduced H. R. 10957 on this same subject. That bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and unanimously passed the House. This Senate amendment merely embodies the provisions of that House bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 9396 is a bill which simply transfers guar seed to the free list under the Tariff Act of 1930. It will be recalled that this bill passed the House unanimously. The bill has been amended in the other body to limit its applicability to a 2-year period. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the bill was amended in the other body to add the provisions of two other small tariff bills which recently passed the House unanimously, namely a bill to permit the free entry of certain mosaics and a bill to permit the free entry of certain stained glass for use in a specific church.

I urge that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

EMPLOYMENT FOR CERTAIN ADULT INDIANS ON OR NEAR INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3416) relative to employment for certain adult Indians on or near Indian reservations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to help adult Indians who reside on or near Indian reservations to obtain reasonable and satisfactory employment, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to undertake a program of vocational training that provides for vocational counseling or guidance, institutional training in any recognized vocation or trade, apprenticeship, and on-the-job training, for periods that do not exceed 24 months, transportation to the place of training, and subsistence during the course of training. The program shall be available primarily to Indians who are not less than 18 and not more than 35 years of age and who reside on or near an Indian reservation, and the program shall be conducted under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. For the purposes of this program the Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts or agreements with any Federal, State, or local governmental agency, or with any private school which has a recognized reputation in the field of vocational education and has successfully obtained employment for its graduates in their respective fields of training, or with any corporation or association which has an existing apprenticeship or on-the-job training program which is recognized by industry and labor as leading to skilled employment.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act the sum of $3,500,000 for each fiscal year, and not to exceed $500,000 of such sum shall be available for administrative purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no request for a second.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma and the leadership on both sides of the aisle for bringing this bill, S. 3416, to the House floor under suspension of rules. I firmly believe this is the most important piece of legislation that has been passed in many years, so far as being of service to the American Indian is concerned.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to undertake a program of vocational training, vocational counseling, and guidance for enrolled Indian people who reside in areas of substantial Indian land allotments. It also provides for institutional training in any recognized vocation or trade apprenticeship, and it provides for the contracting with industry for on-the-job training for Indian people.

Under the bill, training periods do not exceed 24 months, but it does provide that the Secretary may, in addition to contracting for the training, provide the transportation and subsistence during the training period.

The bill authorizes that such a training program shall be available primarily to Indians who are between the ages of 18 and 35 and who reside on or near an Indian reservation, and it authorizes the Secretary to establish such rules and regulations for the development of this program as are necessary. It authorizes the Secretary to enter into contracts and agreements with industry, with schools and institutions as are necessary to carry on the provisions of this act, and it authorizes an appropriation of $3,500,000 per year to cover the cost thereof.

It is, of course, the purpose of this act not only to train the Indians, but to give them reasonable assurance that they will be employed at the end of the training period. It fits in "hand in glove" with the relocation program that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has developed with a certain degree of success during the past few years. It was, however, learned that the largest area of failure in the relocation program has resulted from the previous lack of training and the lack of knowledge on the part of the relocatee in industrial work. Most of those who are being relocated have been born and raised in Indian country and have never seen industrial plants. Their transition has been rapid and successful, but experience has proven that if these people could have some intensive training in the work in which they are about to engage, that the percentage of failures would be materially minimized. This program should be of great value in preparing and orientating participants in the Indian relocation program for this new work and this new life. The program will be of great benefit not only to the individual Indians, but to the Nation, since practically all reservations are so vastly overcrowded the economy of these reservation areas will not sustain the large number of people who have been forced to leave there.

Under this program individual Indians will have an opportunity to begin supporting themselves, living as they would like to live, raising their families as they would like to raise them, and fitting into society as they themselves would like to do. If, on the other hand, these Indian people are required to remain on reservations as they are at present, the Government will be required to not only provide special services for them, but to provide relief for their subsistence, special policing because of forced idleness, and we can only look forward to another generation of people who are dependent upon relief rather than opportunity.

There is another great possibility in this legislation. On every Indian reservation in America, there is a vast pool of potential labor supply. This bill should stimulate industries to locate on or near Indian reservations to take advantage of the supply of Indian labor. Under the on-the-job training provisions of the act, the Government will contract for payment of a portion of the wages of the employee while he is learning the trade or business. This will be carried on similar to the GI on-the-job training program which was so very successful following World War II and the Korean war, and with this type of a program available, industry will be looking to these areas of labor supply for their branch industrial plants.

I would call your attention to the committee report, which sets up the following six advantages of the bill:

1. Reservation resources are generally inadequate to support the present population in residence. This program would channel the excess manpower into skilled trades, which would enable the individual and his family to attain a higher standard of living.

2. Indian reservations are usually so remote that the individual does not have the opportunity of obtaining vocational instruction at present subsidized by the Federal and State Governments. S. 3416 would merely extend this service now being offered to non-Indians.

3. An Indian trained as a skilled worker will earn more money, pay more taxes, need fewer special services from the Federal Government, thereby creating a saving to the Government in services, and his income tax might be considered as an offset to the expenditures for training other Indians.

4. This program will supply skilled workers now needed by our industry and thereby utilize one of our most dormant manpower resources.

5. This type of program has been recommended in the past and at present by congressional committees, Office of the President, Bureau of the Budget, Interior Department, and Indian organizations; it seems to have the backing of all interested parties.

6. S. 3416, in assisting Indians to attain a higher standard of living, would help solve the problem of juvenile delinquency on reservations, one of the major contributing factors to delinquency among Indian children being "poverty and poor living conditions."

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is urged by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it is urged by the Secretary of the Interior, it is urged by the Indian Affairs Subcommittee and the full Interior Committee of both the House and the Senate, it is urged by practically every group who are interested in the improvement of the living conditions and standards of the Indian people. It has received favorable approval of the other body, and I am certain that it will have the unanimous support of this House. Thank you.

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill, S. 3416, just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

INDIAN EDUCATION ADVANCES

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, another great educational advance for our Indian people is signaled by this bill. It is surely grounds for congratulations to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Honorable Glen Emmons, and his able Assistant Commissioner, the Honorable Rex Lee.

I was pleased to introduce in the House an almost identical bill, H. R. 9904, which was unanimously reported by the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the House Interior Committee.

H. R. 9904 contained a phrase supplemental to the phrase, "on or near Indian reservations," which appears in the Senate bill. My additional phrase, approved by the House committee, was "or in areas of substantial Indian land allotments." Its purpose was to assure application of this new program in Oklahoma, where we have thousands of potential Indian trainees under this program.

Yesterday I was informed by Assistant Commissioner Lee that this question had been discussed fully in the Bureau of Indian Affairs and it was firmly agreed there that Oklahoma Indians would be covered by the phrase, "on or near Indian reservations."

Although most Indian land in Oklahoma has been individually allotted, there are still many small reservation areas owned by the several tribes, and other reservation programs have always been employed in Oklahoma.

Certainly, we have great need for this program in our State, where many Indian families have taken advantage of the relocation program, but have suffered from the lack of a parallel vocational education and training program.

This bill supplies this missing link in the relocation program, and is sure to produce great benefits. In the final analysis, there is no substitute for education in any rehabilitation undertaking.

May I add that we have at Okmulgee, Okla., in Oklahoma A. and M. Tech, one of the Nation's pioneering schools in the field of vocational education. I earnestly hope that many American Indians will take advantage of this program, and use the fine facilities of Okmulgee A. and M. to do it.

EXTENDING OPERATION OF THE EMERGENCY SHIP REPAIR ACT OF 1954

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 187, to extend the operation of the Emergency Ship Repair Act of 1954.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 4 of the Emergency Ship Repair Act of 1954 (Public Law 608, 83d Congress) is amended by striking out the words "within 24 months after date of enactment of this act," and inserting in place thereof "before July 1, 1958."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, only for the purpose of finding out what this is all about.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend for an additional period of 2 years the operation of the Emergency Ship Repair Act of 1954. This act was originally passed for the purpose of placing in good operating condition a number of naval auxiliary type merchant ships in the reserve fleet. An appropriation was made for this purpose.

Mr. GROSS. How much was the appropriation?

Mr. BONNER. The authorization was $12 million. There are funds yet in previously appropriated money.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman and yield back my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate joint resolution was passed.

AMENDING SECTION 650 OF TITLE 14, UNITED STATES CODE, ENTITLED "COAST GUARD," RELATING TO THE COAST GUARD SUPPLY FUND.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4011) to amend section 650 of title 14, United States Code, entitled "Coast Guard," relating to the Coast Guard Supply Fund.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 650 of title 14, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 650. Coast Guard Supply Fund

"A Coast Guard Supply Fund is authorized. The Secretary may prescribe regulations for designating the classification of materials to be stocked. In such regulations, whenever the fund is extended to include items not previously stocked, the Secretary may authorize an increase in the existing capital of the fund by the value of such usable materials transferred thereto from Coast Guard inventories carried in other accounts. Except for the materials so transferred, the fund shall be charged with the cost of materials purchased or otherwise acquired. The fund shall be credited with the value of materials consumed, issued for use, sold, or otherwise disposed of, such values to be determined on a basis that will approximately cover the cost thereof."

(b) The analysis of chapter 17, title 14, United States Code, is amended by striking out and inserting in place thereof the following item:

"650. Coast Guard supply fund and supply account."

"650. Coast Guard Supply Fund."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, there is no money involved in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, this merely provides different authority for the Coast Guard to operate the General Store Commission provision and uniform code.

The bill would amend the section to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations designating the classification of materials to be stocked. It would also provide for increasing the existing capital of unusable materials transferred from the Coast Guard inventory carried in other accounts. It is merely an accounting matter.

Mr. MARTIN. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

AMENDING SECTION 9 (C) (2) OF THE MERCHANT SHIP SALES ACT OF 1946

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3113) to amend section 9 (c) (2) of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 (c) (2) of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946 is hereby amended by inserting before "; and" at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That the provisions of this subsection (c) (2) shall not apply to any such charter party executed on or after the date of enactment of this amendatory proviso; and the Secretary of Commerce is directed to modify any adjustment agreement to the extent necessary to conform to the provisions of this amendatory proviso."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I just want to ask, Has this bill been on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. BONNER. Yes. It was objected to on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Not passed over; it was objected to and stricken?

Mr. BONNER. Yes. It is a Senate bill, and I understand there was a little matter that was objected to on that ground. If the gentleman desires, I will tell him what it is.

Mr. GROSS. Yes.

Mr. BONNER. It merely provides that ships sold before the Ship Sales Act was passed be put in the same category as ships sold under the Ships Sales Act. At the time the ships were sold, it was understood that if there should be a general Ship Sales Act, these ships would come under it. That is about all there is to it.

Mr. GROSS. And there are no tankers involved in this bill; is that correct?

Mr. BONNER. No tankers.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman this question? I understand that the tanker bill is dead for this session of the Congress.

Mr. BONNER. So far as I am concerned, I imagine it is.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 11554) to amend certain provisions of title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to facilitate private financing of merchant vessels in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? If not, the question is on suspending the rules and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

LITTLE WOOD RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT, IDAHO

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rules of the House, I call up House Resolution 604 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7850) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Little Wood River reclamation project, Idaho. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed by the other body. It was also reported unanimously by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House. I understand it provides for an expenditure on the Little Wood River reclamation project of $1,800,000.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. BUDGE].

Mr. BUDGE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Illinois stated, this bill was passed by the other body and reported unanimously by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives. A rule was granted on July 17. There has been no objection by the Bureau of the Budget. It has been approved by the Department of the Interior. The project has to do with a dam on the Little Wood River where there were very serious floods during this last year. There is an existing dam on the Little Wood River, but it is not large enough to store the amount of water which comes down the canyon. Consequently, in the spring of the year the valley below is flooded and the dam runs out of water and the reservoir runs dry about the middle of July. The irrigation works are all in existence. The land is presently under cultivation to grow hay and is used for pasture purposes. It does not grow any crops which are in surplus. This project would bring new land into cultivation, but would use the existing irrigation works which are there now. As far as I know there is no opposition to the project either in the area or in any department of the Government. I hope that the bill can be enacted into law this session because the situation this last year was so serious that for periods of 4 and 5 days at a time, the community up there was completely isolated by floodwaters and they did not know whether the existing structures could hold the water which was coming down the canyon. For quite some period of time, there was a serious threat not only to all the property down the river but a very serious threat to the lives of the people living below the existing dam. I hope the House will see fit to act favorably on this legislation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes or more or less, as he desires, to the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand what the situation is. Our Republican friends are trying to take over control of the House by this motion. I want my Democratic friends to understand just what this means. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] under the rules called up the resolution, which he is entitled to do when a rule is reported out for 7 days and he is within his rights in doing so. But, I want the House to know just what has happened. It is the first time in all my years of service in the House of Representatives, no matter what party was in control of the House, that a motion of this kind has been made to call up a rule which has a preferential status under the rules of the House. The bill is on the program and it might have been reached.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. It was on the program three weeks ago. A great many rules have been reported out since then which have passed and there are no indications that you were going to give any consideration to this bill which means so much to the people of Idaho.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is not going to affect me by waving his hands.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not think I would.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Not on this occasion. The gentleman might on some other occasions.

The fact is that this is a challenge to the Democratic leadership in the House.

Now, these matters are called up in the ordinary way. There has never been any time that I know of on the Rules Committee when the Republican leadership was in control that we rose to call up a rule under these conditions.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Of course, now, in regard to the leadership, that is why they have the rule.

Mr. MCCORMACK. We understand.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is why we have the rule. Why should there be such a rule unless the situation could arise which has arisen in this case? Otherwise we might as well take the rule out of the books, but to meet a situation like this is why we have the rule.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I am not criticizing you, but I am calling to the attention of the House the significance of what has taken place.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I must yield first to the former—to my good friend from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes, and former majority leader.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Yes, and I say that with every respect.

Mr. HALLECK. And I occupied the position that you now hold for a period of 4 years at separated intervals.

I am sure the gentleman will recall that on numerous occasions over on his side that when you came to me and said: "Now, look, this rule has been out more than 7 days and if you do not program it we are going to call it up," all I ever asked was——

Mr. MCCORMACK. Nobody has said that to me yet.

Mr. HALLECK. How is that?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Nobody has said that to me yet on this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, not over 15 minutes ago——

Mr. MCCORMACK. Oh, you came just a few minutes ago, but this goes to the matter of programing ahead, asking for it to be programed, the leadership coming over and asking for action.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I have yielded to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Let me just say to the gentleman——

Mr. MCCORMACK. Let me make this further observation.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Sit down.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Just a minute now. The gentleman from Indiana and I are capable of handling our own affairs.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. He would if you would let him talk.

Mr. MCCORMACK. If the Republican leadership had wanted this bill brought up they would have consulted me.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me further?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Wait a minute, just a minute, now. It is not necessarily certain that even when a rule is adopted that the bill is passed. This proceeding, as I understand, is only to the rule.

But I want my Democratic friends to know just what is taking place, that they are trying by this maneuver to take away the control and management of bringing up particular legislation from the Democratic leadership.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Since the gentleman said we just brought this question up 15 minutes ago on this Little Wood River bill, let me set the record straight. The other day, days ago, when you were announcing the program and you had a whole list of 17 bills for suspension——

Mr. MCCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Idaho asked about the Hood River project.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Yes, that is true.

Mr. HALLECK. And wanted to know if you were going to call it up. Subsequently your remarks indicated that it was programed.

Mr. MCCORMACK. It would be programed.

Mr. HALLECK. And it was programed.

Mr. MCCORMACK. That it would be programed.

Mr. HALLECK. I understand what the word "programed" means, it means that we are going to consider the bill or call it up in some way.

Mr. MCCORMACK. No; that does not necessarily follow.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman understands that this matter is an urgent matter and that there was an insistent desire to have it considered.

Now, may I say to my friends on the Democratic side, we are now in the closing days of the session and we have handled a lot of matters here of interest to Members on both sides of the aisle and I think it has been done with great good sportsmanship and good feeling on both sides. It must be apparent to you on the Democratic side that in this situation we are only exercising a prerogative that is given to us under the rules and that everything that has been done has been done in accordance with the rules.

Now, if you want to kill this bill you have the votes to do it, but I think we might as well stand up and be counted and learn whether or not this is a one-way street, whether the rule works one way or whether it works both ways.

We are calling this rule up to get something done that ought to be done, and we are acting in accordance with the rules to get consideration of a matter that is of great interest to the gentleman from Idaho and the people he represents.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman from Idaho had used different judgment, if the gentleman from Idaho had recognized that there is leadership on the Democratic side and if he had done what other Members have done, whether or not the bill could be brought up despite the fact it is programed is something I am unable to state. But the fact is I have never seen this method used by any member of the Rules Committee in the 28 years I have been a Member of Congress. It is an attempt to take over from the Democratic leadership control of the program. I have never said that this bill would not come up.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the gentleman said it would come up?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. I never said it would not come up. There is other legislation ahead of this. We have other legislation to consider.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman ever done this before?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Like this?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes, on a bill just recently considered in regard to increase in postal rates.

Mr. McCORMACK. That may be true on that bill. Outside of that? And that was after I incited you to do it. I engaged in a pretty good campaign of incitement on that occasion.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. My memory is very good. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The majority leader in talking to the gentleman from Idaho stated this, and if this is not a promise I do not know what it means. I quote the gentleman:

> In relation to the bill, H. R. 7850, I have looked into the matter and since a rule has been granted on this bill I am including it in the program for next week.

Does that mean that you are going to do something about it?

Mr. McCORMACK. No, not necessarily. Oh, no. There have been programs made on your side. It is still on the program.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I would like to refresh the gentleman's memory.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am opposed to this irregular way, this irregular method of trying to get this bill up for consideration. It is a challenge to the Democratic leadership and I want my Democratic friends to understand they are trying to take over control of the House as far as this bill is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN. I know my good friend, the majority leader, has been harassed in the last 2 weeks by this deluge of legislation that is pouring in upon us. I think he wants to do the right thing. I know he wants to do what he thinks is the right thing. If he will recall correctly, I spoke to him on several occasions about this bill and on one occasion here are the words the gentleman said to me, and if that is not a commitment, of course, I do not know the definition of commitment. The gentleman said he would take care of the young man from the West.

Mr. McCORMACK. I said that we would take care of Doc MILLER's bill. I say my friend's recollection is incorrect because I never referred to the young fellow from the West.

No, my friend is seriously mistaken about that. So far as I am concerned, the bill is still on the program. Whether it will be brought up or not depends on circumstances. To me this means to disrupt an orderly program and I hope that will not be done.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is an honorable man; a fine, Christian gentleman of this House, and his word to me has been just as good as his bond. We have talked to each other about this and other bills. He has been very fine to me about bringing my bill up and others that we have talked about. We talked about it with the leadership on our subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ASPINALL], and we had a hearing on this bill and the committee reported it out. And, he was asked to use all means possible to get the bill up for consideration, and we have been trying to follow orderly procedure. When you and I go home tonight and look in the mirror, we have to look at JOHN McCORMACK and A. L. MILLER. We have to look at ourselves. We have to decide whether we made some commitments which we are going to keep or whether we made some commitments we are not going to keep. The bill has been programed, and if we stay here, before we quit tonight—this is the last day—I know the gentleman from Massachusetts will program the bill and it will be before the House, because he has told me it would.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman spoke to me outside.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. He said that it would be programed, and I am sure that word means it will come up.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman spoke to me outside for a moment earlier in the afternoon, did he not?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That was confidential.

Mr. McCORMACK. And I said "Doc, I kept my word with you."

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That was confidential.

Mr. McCORMACK. And I kept my word with you, anyhow, did I not?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. You said it was programed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Wait a minute. I went further with you. I said I will use every effort to get your bill up, did I not?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it was called up.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes, and I appreciate it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Sure.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. As to the business of a bill being programed, you said it would be programed, and I believe you, as an honorable gentleman, will bring it up before the House adjourns.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the thing that impresses me about this discussion is that not one word has been said that would indicate that it was not a good bill. Now, that means that it is an admission that it is a good bill. Is the House going to pass on a question on the merits of the bill or on something else? I think we ought to do our duty.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute for the purpose of inquiring whether the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], is here ready to be recognized when this rule is adopted. He is the one that came over to me.

The SPEAKER. That matter is entirely in the hands of the chairman.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am inquiring whether Mr. ENGLE is here. I think this is proper. Is Mr. ENGLE, the chairman of the committee, here?

Mr. ENGLE. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Is it true that you came over here and asked me to bring this rule up this way?

Mr. ENGLE. No; it is not. I did not ask you to make this preferential motion. I said that I had gone to Mr. McCORMACK——

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Why did the gentleman come over here and talk to me? I could not put it on the program. This is the only way I could get it up.

Mr. ENGLE. Because I wanted my friend from Idaho to know that I was doing what I could to bring this bill on the program, and I went to Mr. McCORMACK and asked him if he was going to bring the rule up. Dr. MILLER and I both talked to him. I did not say anything about a preferential motion; no, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 168, not voting 91, as follows:

GRANTING CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS CO. FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM ON THE NORTH BRANCH OF THE POTOMAC RIVER

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4099) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. for the construction of a dam on the North Branch of the Potomac River.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is granted to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a dam on the North Branch of the Potomac River near North Branch, Md., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation approximately 5 miles south of Cumberland, Md.

SEC. 2. Work shall not be commenced on such dam until the plans therefor, including plans for all accessory works, are submitted to and approved by the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Engineers, who may impose such conditions and stipulations as they deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 3. The authority granted by this act shall terminate if the actual construction of the dam hereby authorized is not commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of enactment of this act.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COLE. I demand a second.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the session today, when the House met at 10 o'clock, I announced to the House that because of my feeling of the urgency with respect to two bills which are of vital importance to the atomic energy program and which had been reported practically unanimously by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, the urgency that those bills should be considered by the House before we adjourned, and I stated that until those bills were considered by the House, I would feel obliged to object to any unanimous-consent requests with respect to legislative procedures.

Mr. Speaker, it is now 6½ hours later. I have pursued that policy as best I can. These are two bills which the President has expressed his strong endorsement and urged their enactment. They are bills that will do more to expedite the peacetime development of atomic energy than anything the Congress can do.

Now, at this late hour it appears quite evident that the leadership does not intend to give the House an opportunity to pass on those bills. Being something of a realist, I acknowledge the futility of further efforts on my part and therefore wish to say that I shall no longer object to these unanimous-consent requests, but must again remind the House that the responsibility for failure to consider these vital bills in the atomic energy program must rest squarely on the leadership of the House.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, it was but a few days ago that there was much talk here in the Chamber of the alleged extreme necessity for an acceleration of the development of atomic energy for power purposes. It is true there were differences of opinion as to how best to bring about the most progress in that field. Many of us believed that the partnership agreements that have been entered into between Government and private capital under the act which the Congress itself brought into being showed the best promise for success in the near future. Now, it ought to be understood by everybody that the passage of this atomic energy bill, H. R. 12050, is absolutely essential for the continuation of those progams that have gone along very well up to this point. And, I say it comes with poor grace from those who lost in the other fight to erect this roadblock in the way of the progress of the programs that promise so much for the future. I just want to say, with my friend from New York, that you shall have to take the responsibility, and if you do not bring the legislation up and pass it here—and it could be passed in 10 minutes if you move to suspend the rules, because everybody is for it except one man, so far as I know, on both sides of the aisle; and you could do much to further its program—but, if you will not do it in this Congress, then some of us will see to it that it is the first order of business in the next one.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rose to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I assume he feels no less strongly that it is not only a matter of great urgency with the Atoms for Peace program but may even have a direct or indirect benefit relationship to the security of the United States.

Mr. COLE. In response to the gentleman, I could not demonstrate more vividly my conviction of the importance of these bills to our national welfare, our national security, and our world leadership in peacetime uses of atomic energy than to have devoted, as I have, the last 6½ hours in an effort to have the bills brought up, and in that effort making myself extremely unpopular by having to object to some of the unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one further observation?

Mr. COLE. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. In case anyone desires to challenge the sincerity of the gentleman from New York—and I am sure none of us would—no man stands any higher in the respect of his colleagues than STUB COLE, of New York. But, he voted for the bill that the rest of you over there wanted a few days ago and some of us did not want. But, he voted for your bill.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we were faced with the problem of deciding whether the atomic-energy program should go forward in the field of developing atomic-power reactors. This House in its judgment by 12 votes turned down a program which would have provided $400 million for the development of peacetime atomic-power reactors. The Republican Members, almost to a man, voted against the bill.

The 1954 Atomic Energy Act which the Republicans passed in the 83d Congress has been in existence for over 2 years. Invitations have been extended to private industry to build reactors. For 2 years they have failed to come up with a practical program. Although there has been a lot of talk and a lot of discussion, there has not been one design of private-industry reactors approved by the Safety Reactor Committee of the Atomic Energy Commission for instituting this program, although many private-industry people have talked about it. The reason they have not started a program of this kind is because, in the first place, it takes from $50 million to $100 million to build one of these large-scale experimental reactors. All the scientific evidence at this time is that these reactors would not be economical. Therefore, no private industry, unless it had a gimmick of some kind, could build these reactors with the funds that are given to these corporations for investment for profit-making purposes.

Now they have come forward and asked for insurance, public-liability insurance, on these reactors. Remember that these reactors contain fissionable material in volume as much as an atomic bomb and in some instances greater than an atomic bomb. There have been accidental incidents in connection with these reactors. There have been minor meltdowns, and there could be major melt-downs of fuel rods, emission of radioactive gas, and leakage of certain radioactive liquid materials. Fortunately, none of these accidents so far has imperiled human life. But no scientist can tell you that tomorrow one of these reactors may not run wild and break down, with tragic effect on nearby population.

The fact that no scientist or engineer can tell that to the insurance companies has impelled the insurance companies of America up to this moment to say, "We are afraid of this." A group of them have said, "We will give up to $65 million insurance." But the need is for $500 million of liability insurance for each of these reactors.

But let me stop here and say that no insurance company has as yet set a premium on the $65 million worth of liability insurance which they as a group have offered to give to the reactor builders. Therefore, private industry does not know how much they will have to pay for $65 million or any part thereof. If the price is high, they will take possibly $1 million at a high price of liability insurance and get the other $499 million at Government expense and for a nominal charge of $3,000 for a 100,000-kilowatt power reactor.

In other words, it is like selling accident insurance to an automobile owner on the basis of how many spark plugs he has in his automobile, or how many wheels he has on the automobile rather than the incidence of accidents per thousand cars. This is the position they are in. And so, as an excuse for not picking up this program they have said we must have $500 million worth of liability insurance before we can build. The Government does not have the right to give $500 million worth of liability insurance on human lives in these great cities close to where these reactors would be located, unless the insurance companies of America can establish the rate of risk to human life that is involved.

Dollars cannot take the place of human life. Nor can we as Representatives of the people discharge our responsibility for protecting our people from an unknown and unpredictable hazard, just because a few selfish utility companies want to take for their future benefit a great new source of energy. A source of energy which has been brought into being through the expenditure of approximately $15 billion supplied by the taxpayers—not the electric utility corporations. Just because we have the United States Treasury behind us is no sign that we have a right to gamble with a million human lives in one of these great cities. I for one do not want a reactor near my city of Los Angeles until we have a record of reactor operations so that we can say that we know that the risk is a bearable risk and not an unknown or unbearable risk.

May I say further that this is just the first gimmick the private industry people will want. When they get the insurance there will be further delay. They have applications down at the Treasury Department for rapid tax amortization, and if they get that, and they may get it, I do not know, they also will want to be excluded from the Utility Holding Company Act. If they get that, and I do not know but what they will, they will come to you and want long-range contracts at high prices for the plutonium that is created in these reactors. So it is one gimmick after the other.

The truth of the business is we are not ready to locate these great reactors, these potential death-dealing reactors, near our cities. That is why this committee, and I join with them, is proposing that we have a full-scale reactor program on the isolated sites of our atomic energy installations away from these great centers of population, because we knew they would be safer there than anywhere else, and we knew if they were built there with Government money we would proceed to catch up with the power reactor building program of England and the Soviet Union. I tell you that they are getting ahead of us in this art, and they are the ones that are making contracts to sell reactors. England made a contract to sell a reactor to Japan the other day because she was ahead in the art. Our people are not ready to deliver reactors and the British are. The gentlemen on my left here, the Republicans who voted down the only practical program for the building of reactors, can carry the blame regardless of how they try to blame it on the Democratic Party. Remember this, the Republican Members by their votes Tuesday stood in the way of the only practical program. They are the ones who have to take the blame. Let them carry it into this election, and we will take the platform and prove it to the American people.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, in its issue of Thursday, July 26, on page 16, the editorial page, the Washington Post sunk to a new low. Under the heading "Atomic Power Deferred," the Post printed an editorial on the defeat of the so-called Gore-Holifield bill and called this defeat "A tribute to the obstructionism of Lewis Strauss." Setting aside the fact that Mr. Strauss does not have a vote on the floor of the House of Representatives, and that the bill referred to was recommitted to the Joint Committee by a vote of 203 to 191, and that it had survived an even more definite threat of defeat a few moments earlier—when a motion by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to strike out the enacting clause, and thus defeat the bill, was carried in the committee of the Whole House by a vote of 155 to 135, and lost, when it was reported to the Congress, by a narrow margin of 199 to 195—the editorial is not only inaccurate but unquestionably libelous.

The editorial says that the House Appropriations subcommittee accused Chairman Strauss of fraud. The House Appropriations subcommittee did no such thing; neither did the full Committee on Appropriations, when it met to pass upon H. R. 12350, as reported to it by the subcommittee on Public Works. To begin with, a subcommittee does not issue a report.

The report is written, after the "mark-up" by a subcommittee, and submitted, to accompany the bill, properly completed as to money figures and wording, to the full committee. Not until then does a report appear, and it is a report of the full committee and not of a subcommittee.

So much for technicalities; the fact of this matter is that the word "fraud" is not used in the committee report to which the editorial referred.

What the editorial also omits is that sufficient members of the majority side of the Appropriations Committee considered the report so offensive, and so far from the truth, that they insisted on its being cleaned up before it was accepted as the report of the Appropriations Committee on H. R. 12350. I repeat, the word "fraud" did not appear in either edition.

The bill referred to, which the report was later written to accompany, was passed out of the subcommittee by a straight party line vote, and again, out of the full committee by a straight party line vote; the only deviation was that, in the full committee, the Democratic Members themselves refused to accept the report in its original wording.

Libel is still libel, even in Washington. The Post editorial was not only inaccurate but also libelous.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. FALLON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCOTT. My inquiry is, How does it happen that we are debating a bill which we are not allowed to consider?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot figure a parliamentary inquiry out of what the gentleman said.

Mr. SCOTT. I was not able to figure what was happening, and I thought I would inquire.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CORREGIDOR BATAAN MEMORIAL COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 461)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 193, 83d Congress, as amended, I hereby transmit to the Congress of the United States a report of the activities of the Corregidor Bataan Memorial Commission for the period ending June 30, 1956.

RECESSES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at any time during the remainder of the day it may be in order for the Speaker to declare recesses subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object because I think that is the thing to do. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the probability of the sine die adjournment? Many Members are asking about it. I understand progress is being made in respect to the housing bill and, if that is carried through, I cannot see any reason why we cannot adjourn early.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand the public works conference report will be ready very shortly. I wish I could give some definite information, but the purpose of the unanimous-consent request I made is in the hope that we might be able to complete our business tonight, but I cannot give any definite assurance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

OAHE, GAVINS POINT, AND FORT RANDALL DAMS AND RESERVOIR PROJECTS, MISSOURI RIVER

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2093) to authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Corps of Engineers, to undertake certain public works and grant compensation for certain property damages as a result of the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and reservoir projects, Missouri River, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to pay to any bona fide lessee or permittee owning improvements situated on a railroad right-of-way or on Indian tribal land the fair value, as determined by the Secretary, or by a court of competent jurisdiction, of any such improvements which will be rendered operative or be otherwise adversely affected by the construction of the Gavins Point, Fort Randall, and Oahe Dams and Reservoir projects on the Missouri River.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to pay to the Pollock Independent School District No. 3, Pollock, S. Dak., an amount equal to the difference between the sum paid for the taking of school facilities of said school district in the condemnation proceedings entitled "United States of America, plaintiff, against 10.00 Acres of Land, and so forth, defendants", civil No. 682ND, filed in the United States District Court for the District of South Dakota, Northern Division on May 7, 1956, and the actual cost of replacing the school facilities so acquired as the Secretary shall find to be reasonable: Provided, however, That in no event shall the additional amount paid pursuant to this authorization exceed $200,000.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to provide the funds necessary to carry out the provisions of this act from any moneys appropriated for the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and Reservoir projects: Provided, however, That in no event shall the amount so expended exceed $550,000.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide compensation for certain property losses in certain reservoir projects and for the replacement of school facilities of the Pollock Independent School District, Pollock, S. Dak., acquired by the United States for the Oahe Dam and Reservoir."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MINING CLAIMS UNDER ACT OF AUGUST 12, 1953

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3941) relating to certain mining claims which were eligible for validation under the act of August 12, 1953, but which were not validated solely because of the failure of the owners to take certain action to protect their claims within the prescribed period, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) subject to any valid intervening rights acquired under the laws of the United States, any mining claims owned by Arthur W. Hyde, John H. Gossett, Clyde A. Bailey and Manuel Silva, all of the State of New Mexico, located within section 20, township 13 north, range 9 west, New Mexico Principal Meridian, McKinley County, N. Mex., which would have been validated under the act of August 12, 1953 (67 Stat. 539), except for the fact that the owners thereof failed to post notice of their claims and to file amended notices of location within the period prescribed by that act, shall be effective to the same extent as if they had been given full force and effect under the provisions of the said act of August 12, 1953: Provided, That no mining claim shall be validated hereunder unless the owner thereof shall, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act, post on the mining claim validated hereunder in the manner required for posting notice of location of mining claims and file for record in the office where the notice or certificate of location of such claim is of record an amended notice of location of such claim, stating that such notice is filed pursuant to the provisions of this act and for the purpose of obtaining the benefits hereof.

(b) Subject to any valid intervening rights acquired under the laws of the United States, any mining claims owned by Thelma Arndt, Wallace (or Wally) Lawson, Richard L. (or R. L.) Greene, Elden F. Keith, Zola Keith, Leon Keith, Lee E. Keith, Robert Arndt, Rose Greene, Ferne Cressy, Marjorie Lawson, and Frank Cressy, all of the State of Wyoming, located within sections 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, or 15, township 43 north, or section 33 or 34, township 44 north, range 82 west, Sixth Principal Meridian, Johnson County, Wyo., which would have been validated under the act of August 12, 1953 (67 Stat. 539), except for the fact that the owners thereof failed to post notice of their claims and to file amended notices of location within the period prescribed by that act, shall be effective to the same extent as if they had been given full force and effect under the provisions of the said act of August 12, 1953: Provided, That no mining claim shall be validated hereunder unless the owner thereof shall, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act, post on the mining claim validated hereunder in the manner required for posting notice of location of mining claims and file for record in the office where the notice or certificate of location of such claim is of record an amended notice of location of such claim, stating that such notice is filed pursuant to the provisions of this act and for the purpose of obtaining the benefits hereof.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the validation of certain mining claims owned by Arthur W. Hyde, John H. Gossett, Clyde A. Bailey and Manuel Silva, all of the State of New Mexico, and Thelma Arndt, Wallace (or Wally) Lawson, Richard L. (or R. L. Greene, Elden F. Keith, Zola Keith, Leon Keith, Lee E. Keith, Robert Arndt, Rose Greene, Ferne Cressy, Marjorie Lawson, and Frank Cressy, all of the State of Wyoming."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

By unanimous consent, a second was considered as ordered.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, this merely takes care of claims which were not filed within the proper time?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is correct.

Mr. THOMPSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, since the committee hearings were held I have received an affidavit from Burton S. Hill, attorney at law, Buffalo, Wyo., who represents the parties interested in the Wyoming lands. This, I believe, clarifies this situation as applied to those lands. The affidavit reads as follows:

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES—IN THE MATTER OF A BILL TO PROVIDE THE VALIDATION OF CERTAIN MINING CLAIMS OWNED BY THELMA ARNDT, WALLACE (OR WALLY) LAWSON, RICHARD L. (OR R. L.) GREENE, ELDEN F. KEITH, ZOLA KEITH, LEON KEITH, LEE E. KEITH, ROBERT ARNDT, ROSE GREENE, FERNE CRESSY, MARJORIE LAWSON, AND FRANK CRESSY, ALL OF THE STATE OF WYOMING, LOCATED WITHIN SECTIONS 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, AND 15, TOWNSHIP 43 NORTH, AND SECTIONS 33 AND 34, TOWNSHIP 44 NORTH, RANGE 82 WEST OF THE 6TH P. M. THE MINING CLAIMS IN QUESTION ARE FOR BENTONITE—PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR S. 3941

STATE OF WYOMING,
County of Johnson, ss:

AFFIDAVIT

Burton S. Hill, of lawful age and being first duly sworn on oath, deposes and says:

That he is attorney for Thelma Arndt, Wallace (or Wally) Lawson, Richard L. (or R. L.

Greene, Elden F. Keith, Zola Keith, Leon Keith, Lee E. Keith, Robert Arndt, Rose Greene, Ferne Cressy, Marjorie Lawson, and Frank Cressy, who reside in Johnson and Natrona Counties, Wyo., pertaining to certain mining claims in sections 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 15, township 43 north, and sections 33 and 34, township 44 north, range 82 west of the sixth p. m.

That the mining claims in question were filed in Buffalo, Wyo., during the year of 1948. That affiant was not attorney for the said locators at the time of the filing of said mining claims but knows of his own knowledge that a thorough search was made of the records at the land office, then in Buffalo, Wyo., for any prior claims or leases; but there appeared to be more whatever.

That patent proceedings were commenced covering said claims on or about the 8th day of June 1955, and that before said application was filed another search of the Land Office records at the Bureau of Land Management in Cheyenne, Wyo., was made to determine whether or not there were any prior claims or leases. This search was not made by affiant, but to his personal knowledge the search was made.

That on or about March 16, 1956, affiant did make a check at the Cheyenne, Wyo., Land Office as to the priority of the mining claims in question for the reason that the patenting proceedings were not moving as rapidly as they should have been. After a very minute search he found that said claims were filed over certain oil and gas leases made in March of 1944 and relinquished in February of 1950. The oil and gas leases in question are Nos. LB 038426 and LB 038369.

It is very obvious to affiant why these leases might have been overlooked. There have been so many entries on the Land Office records that the record of these old oil and gas leases is virtually obliterated. Only one skilled in the search of Land Office records would be able to locate these leases. As a matter of fact, because the record was so obliterated affiant asked the assistance of the Land Office personnel to determine the true facts. After some further search it was determined that the above-mentioned oil and gas leases were actually in operation at the time the mining claims in question were filed.

Affiant further says that the mining claims in question would have been relocated under the act of August 12, 1953 (67 Stat. 539) or under the act of August 13, 1954 (68 Stat. 708) if there had been any knowledge of the prior oil and gas leases above mentioned. That there is not now and never has been any design on the part of the above-mentioned locators to gain any advantage by not refiling said mining claims under one of said acts.

That the said locators relocated their claims under the act of August 13, 1954 (68 Stat. 708), on March 20, 1956, in order that they might have priority as mining locators; but each of said claims was relocated by the same identical locators on the same identical lands. However, it is to be understood that all of the validation work on the claims in question had been completed for the purpose of patenting said claims, and before there had been any knowledge of the prior oil and gas leases. It is to be understood, of course, that the said locators do not want to do all of the validation work over again when it would be done on the same lands by the same locators. This would be done at a great expense, which would be to the benefit of no one, but to the the detriment of the mineral premises in question.

Wherefore affiant prays that proposed substitute for S. 3941 does pass.

Dated this July 23, 1956.

BURTON S. HILL, Affiant.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this July 23, 1956.

My commission expires January 21, 1960.

[SEAL] ROBERT A. HILL,
Notary Public.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DISPOSING OF CERTAIN OBSOLETE GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) authorizing the disposal of certain obsolete Government publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, respectively, shall prepare a statement showing the noncurrent and obsolete congressional publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and to submit an itemized list thereof in duplicate, to the Joint Committee on Printing, which is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the publications enumerated on such lists as follows:

First. A printed statement of such publications shall be submitted to each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, and officer of the Senate and House of Representatives, and any Member or officer of either House having any of such publications to his credit may dispose of the same in the usual manner at any time before October 1, 1956.

Second. Upon the expiration of the aforesaid time the Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish to all Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, as promptly as practicable, a list of the publications herein referred to then remaining in the folding rooms, and thereupon such publications shall be subject to the order of any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, in the order in which they are applied for, for a period of 30 days after the day when such list shall be furnished by the Joint Committee on Printing, but no application for the transfer of these publications may be honored.

Third. The Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish a list of all such publications remaining in the folding rooms at the expiration of the last-named period to the various departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government at Washington, including the Superintendent of Documents, Smithsonian Institution, Library of Congress, National Archives and Record Service, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and such publications shall be turned over to any department, independent office, or establishment making written request therefor and shall be allocated in the order in which their application is made, and all such publications which shall remain in the folding rooms for a period of 30 days after such list shall have been furnished to the departments, independent offices, or establishments aforesaid shall be delivered to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, for such disposition as he may deem to be in the best interest of the Government, and he shall submit a report to the Joint Committee on Printing showing the tonnage so disposed of, together with the amount of money derived from such sale which shall be deposited to the credit of miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury of the United States in accordance with existing law.

Fourth. No publication which is described in the list aforesaid shall thereafter be returned to the folding rooms from any source.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SENATE OFFICE BUILDING COMMISSION

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4116) to increase the membership of the Senate Office Building Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the membership of the Senate Office Building Commission, created by the Sundry Civil Appropriation Act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. 481), as amended by Public Law 178, 83d Congress, approved August 3, 1953, is hereby increased from 7 to 9 members, such additional members to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

By unanimous consent, a second was considered as ordered.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask one question. This involves the Senate Office Building; does it not?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. That is correct.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I thought the work has all been done and I cannot quite understand why they should now, when the work is over, enlarge the commission.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. My understanding is that the work has not been completed and that the work is of a continuing nature. The Senate has requested the increase in membership of the commission and for that reason there was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. When the other body makes a request of this kind, usually the House agrees; is that not correct?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. The House always agrees, yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REMOVAL OF CERTAIN GREENHOUSES AT THE BOTANIC GARDEN NURSERY

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3881) authorizing the demolition and removal of certain greenhouses and other structures on square 576 west in Washington, District of Columbia, and the construction of other facilities in place thereof, at the Botanic Garden Nursery, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, is hereby authorized and directed to demolish and remove all existing greenhouses and other structures from square 576 west in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, bounded by Maryland Avenue, Second Street, Independence Avenue, and Third Street SW., and to develop such square as a park area.

SEC. 2. The Architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library and in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Architect of the Capitol and to be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, is hereby authorized and directed to construct eight new greenhouses, a boilerhouse, and other necessary structures and facilities at the United States Botanic Garden Nursery on land heretofore acquired by the United States Botanic Garden under authority of the act of June 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 774), in place of the greenhouses and other structures authorized to be demolished under section 1 hereof.

SEC. 3. The Architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts and to make such expenditures, including expenditures for personal and other services, as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose the sum of $587,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the costly property now operated by the Botanic Gardens at the foot of Capitol Hill will be removed and transferred to other property owned by the Government in Anacostia.

The Senate committee reported the bill unanimously. It was reported unanimously by the House Committee on Public Works.

Mr. GROSS. What will this cost?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Approximately $580,000. It has the approval of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Can the gentleman give us some reason for this sudden desire to move the Botanical Gardens, which have been down here at the foot of the Hill for over a lifetime and very convenient to the Members?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I will say to the gentleman from California that this is no sudden desire on the part of the Architect of the Capitol to remove these facilities, because they are expensive to operate due to being obsolete. The maintenance cost has come to be a considerable factor.

Mr. PHILLIPS. How much is the annual deficit?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. The gentleman means how much will be the annual saving?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No. What has been our annual deficit from year to year?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I am sorry I do not have those figures available for the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I suggest that $580,000 would probably cover a fairly large deficit.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I may say to the gentleman from California that this is merely an authorization. The question the gentleman raises I am sure will be considered by the Committee on Appropriations when the matter comes before them for appropriation.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think it might be possible for this House if given time to discuss it to be willing to do something like this, but I have an inherent resistance to bringing in bills of this nature in the very last hours of the Congress.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. This bill was on the Consent Calendar yesterday, but was objected to because we substituted the Senate bill.

There was no opposition to the measure either in committee or on the floor on yesterday, and I am somewhat surprised to find that there should be opposition at this late date.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman should not be surprised if somebody makes an inquiry on a bill of this character brought up in the last 2 hours of the session.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I am glad of the gentleman's interest in the matter.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. This bill was presented to the Committee on Public Works and reported out unanimously. It was requested by the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I may say to the gentleman from California that this does not mean the entire removal of the property. For instance, the large auditorium that is used for display will be continued, and the flowers and the ornaments that are used in the garden will be on display annually as they have been in the past.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, is not this statement correct, that under the present condition of what we call the old greenhouses, where the wooden framework that holds the panes of glass is in such state that a complete remodeling job needs to be done, that it has been found that if we have to go to that expense it would be more desirable to move this to some other more suitable property owned by the Government and remove it from this very valuable area?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. That was the sentiment of the committee.

Mr. GROSS. Let me see if I can get this straight. You will move this facility from the Botanic Gardens. Are you going to have to construct a new place somewhere out here on the Capitol Grounds.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Only the greenhouses are to be reconstructed, or else we would have to construct them on the present site. The Federal Government already owns the property and it is suitable for the use of the Botanic Gardens in the Anacostia area. It will result in the removal of an unsightly structure from the avenue.

Mr. GROSS. Is $500,000 going to be sufficient to build a new structure?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Yes, that is the amount required.

Mr. GROSS. This is confined strictly to this purpose?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. That is correct.

Mr. GROSS. There is not anything else with respect to this building program?

Mr. JONES of Alabama. There is nothing else in this bill, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. J. Res. 615) for the relief of certain aliens, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 649) for the relief of certain aliens, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman for an explanation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House some time ago. It is a bill which would amend the Communications Act regarding a provision for telephones from ship to shore. It was offered by a member of our committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MACDONALD]. It went to the Senate, and the Senate limited the number of passengers that it would apply to in connection with any vessel. That is all the amendment does.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2226) to authorize the Attorney General to dispose of the remaining assets seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act prior to December 18, 1941, with a committee amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill which was passed by the other body was requested by the Attorney General. It amends the Trading With the Enemy Act and permits the Attorney General to wind up old World War I claims. It is a bill that was requested by the Attorney General as being necessary in order to permit him to clear his books and to complete the disposition of the claims of World War I. There is about $800,000 in the account from World War I, and the Attorney General has gone as far as he can go with reference to the disposal of the property, and this bill permits him to transfer it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, is there not a surplus in this account as compared to some of the claims? What is going to be done with the money remaining or the property in the custodian's hands?

Mr. HARRIS. It transfers the property and what cash is left to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury then continues to carry out the provisions of the act in order to finally dispose of it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General, notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended, or the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, is authorized and directed as soon as practicable after the date of enactment hereof—

(a) to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury for deposit in the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury all cash credited, or which may hereafter be credited, on the books of the Attorney General in the following accounts maintained with respect to property or interests acquired by the United States prior to December 18, 1941, under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended:

(1) Trust No. 47667, Consolidated Unclaimed Balances Account;

(4) Undistributed Income—Interest Reserve;

(b) to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury the assets, other than cash, credited on the books of the Attorney General in Trust No. 47863, German claimants, maintained with respect to property or interests acquired by the United States prior to December 18, 1941, under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, if possible, liquidate such assets and deposit the net proceeds of their liquidation in the German Special Deposit Account created under section 4 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized in his sole discretion at any time to abandon or destroy any asset transferred to him pursuant to this subsection upon his determination that such asset has no value or a value less than the cost of its liquidation;

(c) to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury the cash credited on the books of the Attorney General in Trust No. 6179, Osterreichisch Ungarische Bank, Vienna, maintained with respect to property or interests acquired by the United States prior to December 18, 1941, under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended. So much of such cash as shall be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Attorney General to be the property of Czechoslovakia and Poland shall be carried with the Treasury in accounts in the names of Czechoslovakia and Poland blocked in accordance with Executive Order 8389 of April 10, 1940, as amended. So much of such cash as shall be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Attorney General to be the property of Rumania shall be covered by the Secretary of the Treasury into the Rumanian Claims Fund created by section 302 of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended, and shall be subject to disbursement under section 309 of that act;

(d) to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury for deposit in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts all cash credited on the books of the Attorney General in the following accounts maintained with respect to property or interest acquired by the United States prior to December 18, 1941, under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended:

(1) Trust No. 47675, Polish claimants;

(2) Trust No. 47677, Czech claimants; and

(3) Trust No. 47687, Bulgarian, Hungarian, and Rumanian claimants.

Upon such transfer, the Attorney General shall publish notice thereof in the Federal Register, together with notice of the rights conferred by this subsection upon any person having any claim with respect to any cash so transferred. Within 2 years after the publication of such notice, any person having any claim to any cash so transferred may file in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia an action against the United States for the recovery of the cash so claimed. Upon the filing of any such action, such court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such claim, and to enter judgment against the United States for such sum, if any, as the court may determine to be the amount to which such claimant would have been entitled to receive from any such account if the transfer authorized by this subsection had not been made, except that the amounts so determined to be payable shall be subject to the provisions of any applicable blocking regulations issued under Executive Order No. 8389, dated April 10, 1940, as amended, which remain in force at the time of the entry of such judgment; and

(e) to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury, pending the ultimate disposition thereof, the participating certificates issued to the Alien Property Custodian or the Attorney General pursuant to section 25 of the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended.

SEC. 2. (a) No person shall have any claim to any cash or other assets transferred by the Attorney General to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 1 except persons claiming cash transferred pursuant to subsection (c) or (d) thereof.

(b) The cash or other assets transferred by the Attorney General to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 1 shall not be liable to lien, attachment, garnishment, trustee process or execution, or subject to any order or decree of any court.

SEC. 3. The Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended, is further amended by striking paragraph 15 of subsection (b) of section 9.

SEC. 4. The word "person," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean an individual, partnership, association, or other unincorporated body of individuals, or corporation or body politic.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, after the period at the end of line 19, insert: "This subsection shall not apply in the case of any lien, attachment, garnishment, trustee process or execution, or any order or decree of any court, arising out of any action which was pending or had been decided on or before July 1, 1956."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHIPMENTS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 11969) to require certain safety devices on household refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, lines 8 and 9, strike out "ninety days" and insert "one year."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MANAGEMENT OF RED LAKE INDIAN FOREST AND SAWMILL

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3787) relating to the management of the Red Lake Indian Forest and sawmill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the 17th paragraph of section 9 of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. 123, 137) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Red Lake Indian Forest shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with principles of scientific forestry that will encourage the production of successive timber crops for the benefit of the Indians of the Red Lake Band, and he is hereby authorized (a) to harvest, sell, and manufacture such marketable timber from any tribal lands within the Red Lake Indian Reservation as he may deem to be advisable and, if the timber is the growth of Red Lake Indian Forest, in keeping with the foregoing principles, (b) to establish nurseries and otherwise provide for the reforestation of said lands, (c) to construct and operate sawmills and other facilities for the manufacture into marketable products of the timber harvested from said lands, (d) to purchase, harvest, and manufacture such additional timber standing on or severed from any other lands, including lands outside the reservation, as in his opinion may contribute to the profitable operation of such sawmills and other facilities as a tribal enterprise, subject to such limitations on expenditures as may be prescribed in annual appropriations acts, and (e) to employ, with the consent of the tribal council, such persons and use such means as he may find necessary to carry out the purposes of the foregoing provisions. Any proceeds derived from sales of timber or timber products under this paragraph may be expended in payment of the expenses of any of the activities authorized by this paragraph, including construction expenses."

SEC. 2. The fourth paragraph of section 8 of the act of June 30, 1915 (41 Stat. 3, 14) is hereby amended by striking out the proviso.

Mrs. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to say how happy I am that the bill which I introduced in May of this year, relating to the management of the Red Lake Indian Forest and sawmill, passed the House today. This bill—H. R. 11033—has been under advisement for the past several years and it just could not seem to be brought up at the right time.

I want to thank the members of the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives for being so helpful during the year and for helping me to get this bill to the floor.

The Indian people do not expect much, they only want someone to help them to help themselves. This bill will enable them to proceed in a technical and scientific way in the running of their sawmill, which will make the business more profitable and thus give them more income.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GALLAUDET COLLEGE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the engrossed bill (H. R. 3489) entitled "An act to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage," together with the Senate engrossed amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate is granted.

There was no objection.

TRAINING OF FISHING INDUSTRY PERSONNEL

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10433) to promote the fishing industry in the United States and its Territories by providing for the training of needed personnel for such industry.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10433, with Mr. HAYS of Arkansas in the chair.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 10433 was unanimously reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine. It is sponsored by the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of the Budget has no objection to it.

This bill proposes to do for the fishing industry similar things that we have done for agriculture. At many of the hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine it was apparent that scientists, men versed in scientific explorations for the discovery of fish supply, were scarce in this country. I might say as a compliment to the great States on the Pacific coast, there are only 2 States that conduct a course that students take for the promotion and advancement in the fishing industry. In addition, the bill will provide an extension course, something like the 4–H, or that type of course, in the high schools of the Nation to instruct young men in the art of fishing and in the manner in which it should be gone about. There was no opposition to the bill when it was being considered in the committee.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman of the committee has said, this measure seeks to establish a program of training scientists and technicians for the fishing industry. The bill came before the House several days ago under suspension and failed under suspension although the votes were almost 2 to 1. I believe the vote was about 250 in favor of the bill and 130 against it. The bill was approved unanimously by the committee after testimony from representatives of the industry who felt that they needed this legislation badly. I have had personal requests from several segments of the industry favoring the legislation. I think it is a good bill, although it does call for the expenditure of approximately $925,000 per year.

I may say that there are only two schools in the country which feature programs in their curricula having to do with the training of fishing personnel. One is at the University of Washington and the other at the University of California. I know of no other school which has in its curriculum this type of study.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This is setting the Federal Government up in the school business in the different States, is it not? That is just what it is. You are going right down to the local level and setting the Government up in the school business.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. This program certainly is no different than the program in connection with our agricultural schools. Of course, we could not pretend to go into a program on such an extensive scale as that in connection with agriculture.

May I add one other thought. The thing we are considering here is more than just an industry. I think I have on other occasions called the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that there are only two sources of food in the country, one is the land and the other the sea. It seems to me that the people of the United States and this Congress should be tremendously concerned with food of this sort which is available to us in the sea. It will become more and more important as time passes on and our population increases.

In connection with what the gentleman from New York has said about this matter, may I say that at the present time the Federal Government spends just under $6 per ton to produce agricultural food products. In connection with fisheries we spend about 80 cents per ton to produce fish food products. It certainly is not any unusual or overreaching request that we are making.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understood this would cost something like $900,000 a year. Will this cost be met by the industry or by the taxpayers of the United States?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. It will be met by the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We may have a shortage of well-trained fishermen in this country, but we also have a shortage of doctors and scientists. We refuse to subsidize schools for the education of medical practitioners, scientists, and others of that type. Why should we do something for the fishing industry that we refuse to do for the benefit of the doctors and scientists?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I should like to comment on that. If the gentleman from Ohio will consider that not only are we trying to protect an industry but we are also trying to protect a food resource. In that regard we are in no different position, it seems to me than we are in connection with the educational programs for the farmers. It is not entirely that we want to support the farmer himself. It is the fact that we are concerned about a land and food resource.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It has always been said, and I think most people agree that the liberties of this country depend to a great extent on a free press and freedom of the press. I happen to make the largest part of my living out of the newspaper business. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to vote Federal money at the expense of all the American taxpayers to set up linotype schools to educate printers because there is a great shortage in our industry, which actually affects the freedom of the press.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Of course, I would not because, as I said, I am concerned not about an industry here so much as I am concerned about our food resources. This Congress has, on a number of occasions, done things to protect the resources of the United States whether they be water, mineral, forests, or what have you. In that sense, this is a little different than offering Government assistance to an industry.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Well, some people in our part of the country where we are dependent on pork and beef cattle feel that the more we help the fishing industry, the less we sell of our beef and pork. What about that situation?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. May I say to the gentleman the day will come when our population in this country will increase to a point where we will be tickled to death to have fishery resources that we can depend upon.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield.

Mr. GAVIN. I was just discussing this proposed legislation with my very good and able friend, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE]. She inquired of me whether or not there is any program contemplated for cooking the fish? The gentlewoman seems to think since we are trying to carry on an educational program to catch the fish, there ought to be a program to cook the fish and I quite agree with her. I think that ought to be a part of the program, too.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I think the gentleman misses the point of the program envisaged in this bill. Coming back to what I already said, one of the things we are endeavoring to do here is to train fishery people to recognize, as we on the committee do, that we have at stake an interest in preserving our fishery resources in our waters.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It has been suggested here by some Members who do not have commercial fishing in their respective districts, but who do have trappers and hunters, whether the gentleman would be willing to include trappers and hunters and have a program for training young men coming out of college how to trap and hunt. Would the gentleman be willing to do that?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. No, I would not. I think that falls into a different category, too. I know the gentleman is being facetious in what he said.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I would like to ask two questions. With reference to the schools that do exist, are they State financed?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Yes, they are.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Why cannot these other States, if they are sufficiently interested in this particular industry, do like California has done?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I may say to the gentleman that I do not know why they do not have the same kind of curriculums in their schools.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. May I suggest that the reason is they are not interested enough?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. If the gentleman will permit me to complete what I started to say, the fact remains that the States have not instituted this program in their colleges. This bill seeks to encourage them to do so. We, in the Congress, should be very interested in protecting the national interest in these food resources.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I think we do have an interest but I would suggest that those States that have a sufficient interest do what we expect them to do and set up schools. And those States that are not interested have not done so.

The other question is this. Talking about a resource, actually you are going to train people to deplete the resources because already we have a situation in the Great Lakes and also with reference to your salmon out in the Northwest where I understand it is not a question of teaching them how to catch more, but rather how to preserve what we have.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. That is exactly what is envisaged in this program. Of course, the technicians who would be developed under this program would instruct fishermen to catch fish more efficiently and at less cost. But they would also teach them fishery conservation and development practices. Out in the Northwest such knowledge and practices have restored and increased certain species of fish. Naturally, the fishermen caught more fish after restoration and increase of species.

The gentleman, I believe, has a mistaken concept of what the bill is intended to do. The bill is not designed to teach fishermen how to catch more fish, but to teach them how to catch fish more efficiently and conserve the fish resources.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. It is a conservation program?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. It has conservation features.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield.

Mr. PELLY. The gentleman has just referred to the Great Lakes problem. In the Great Lakes there is a problem of the lamprey eel which has wiped out great fish resources. This is not the problem of any one State. We are dealing with a great national resource and it should be treated as a national problem. For instance our problem on the Pacific coast is an international problem and is handled by an international commission.

It is true that some States have established schools of fisheries, but as the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON] has pointed out, the problem which this legislation seeks to get at is not the problem of the individual fisherman. We are dealing with a great natural resource, and I hope the Members will not look at this as being the project of any State.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems to me that the gentleman from Ohio who spoke of its interfering with pork, that we have done a great deal of legislating for pork, and I do not mean that in the facetious slang sense of the word, but we have passed a great deal of legislation for farmers and for the pork industry. It seems only just to help the fishing industry which is so important to us in many sections of the country, and, indeed, to the entire country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. PELLY] that this is a very important bill to the fishing industry of the entire country. It is one bill that the industry of all sections of the country have agreed upon. We all know that the fishing industry is the first industry of the western hemisphere. It is still an important industry in all sections of the country.

This bill is considered by members of the industry, and I agree with them, to be a matter of importance and significance; certainly, the industry has taken it so seriously that at their convention they unanimously agreed to request legislation along this line, and that is why I introduced the bill at the request of the industry.

This bill will do a tremendous amount of good, and it seems to me that the great contributions made by our fishing industry through the decades that we should help them with the difficulties they are laboring under at the present time. The very fact that they are in unanimous agreement upon this particular bill warrants its passage.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and also to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the requests of the gentleman are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is really one of the great authorities in this country on fishing, and I hope he will tell us how these people should be trained if we are going to do it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. As so often happens, I regret very much that the gentleman is completely mistaken. Wish I had the ability he attributes to me.

I am not only not an authority on fishing but I have difficulty in catching fish. If I knew more about it I would go into consultation with myself and use what knowledge I have, if any.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I must yield to the gentleman. He is the creator of the Hoover Commission. It was his bill which brought it into existence. He served long and faithfully on that Commission and is familiar with the reports of the Task Force, but I have no doubt but what he will give me a ribbing of some kind.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I inquire whether or not, if this legislation is enacted, this fish school legislation, the gentleman expects to enter college and study fishing? He said he was not an expert.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No, I never went to college to study fishing, nor do I expect to do so, although some of my first money came from fish, spearing suckers through the ice, pulling them from out of the snowbanks where I stored them and selling them to the farmers when they came to town on Saturday. I became a fisherman later on.

I want to refer to the situation the gentlemen have been trying to keep me from talking about. A little while ago a report was filed by the Committee on Government Operations. It is on the employment and utilization of experts and consultants, one of the reports put out by the very industrious and active Committee on Government Operations.

I did not have time to go over that report and write minority views. It is 122 pages long. I simply said I did not have time on account of other duties. I just wrote:

MINORITY REPORT

Because of the almost continuous sessions of the subcommittees of the Committee on Government Operations and the daily meeting of the House, when Members' presence on the floor is necessary if they are to perform their duties, the minority have been without any opportunity to examine the hearings, read the reports filed by the majority, prepare dissenting or additional views.

This situation is protested as being unauthorized under our system of legislation, as being unfair, and depriving the individual Members of Congress, who are members of the committees making the reports, of their opportunity to perform their duties.

The action of the committee in delaying the putting out of these reports until the closing days of the Congress—action which automatically deprives the Members of their civil rights—is in sharp contrast with the action of the House in adopting the civil rights bill.

It is proof, indeed, that actions speak louder than words; that verbal adherence to a principle is no indication that it will be followed or supported when an actual situation arises.

CLARE E. HOFFMAN.

Along came the chairman of the committee, the very capable gentleman from Chicago [Mr. DAWSON], and he filed additional views. Here they are, and they are worthy of consideration and study. The gentleman states:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF HON. WILLIAM L. DAWSON

The minority members and the majority members of the Committee on Government Operations have the same amount of time in which to work.

There is not the slightest doubt about that.

Maybe the majority members of the committee are more industrious and perhaps apply themselves more earnestly to their duties and responsibilities.

That may be so. I am not contradicting anything the gentleman says. On one of these subcommittees at least I was the only Republican who attended the hearings in three States. There were Senators there, there was a Democratic Member from the House present, but I was the lone Republican because the Republicans on that committee, or at least some of them, had been assured it was just a study that was to be made. It was a beautiful trip out west, I thought, but actually it was not. It was nothing but work day in and day out with nothing worthwhile accomplished.

This is the point: I have as much time and the minority Members have as much time as do majority Members, but there are not as many of us. One man in 1 hour just cannot do as much work as can 10 men. Do you get the point? The Committee on Government Operations has under the Reorganization Act 10 staff members, half of them anyway getting $10,000 or $11,000 a year. I am not complaining about that, please do not misunderstand me. That is the regular setup of the committee under the Reorganization Act. In addition to that, the chairman of the committee, and the House in its wisdom granted the authority, has some $995,000 more for investigations and expenses. Then he employed a staff of experts, and they are experts. There are 60 employees on that committee and its subcommittees. So, do you see how absurd it is to have the chairman say that the minority has as much time as they did?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Just a moment. You and I are in accord about something, are we not?

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Absolutely.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman wanted to know why I objected to some of the bills on the unanimous consent calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. May I have 5 minutes more? There will be a recess, anyway, so what is the difference?

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BONNER and Mr. TOLLEFSON each yielded 2 minutes to Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan.)

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I just wanted to ask: I think you mentioned the House Administration Committee having all this money. Did the gentleman from Michigan appear against the money, or was he in favor of it?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Oh, yes, I did, and on the point of order they struck out $100,000 that they did not get, otherwise it would have been $600,000 the last trip instead of five. Yes, I was there. I do not know whether you were there or not.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. I was there, but I cannot recall seeing you there.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. This is the point. Just think of it. All these reports coming in, and being one of the most vocal and consistent supporters of the Eisenhower administration, at least on quorum calls and matters of that kind, I get requests from friends of the administration who are not in office to file answers to some of these reports, and I just cannot do it for lack of time. So, weigh this statement of the chairman that we have just as much time as does the majority, and then if I plead guilty for myself—not for the other members of the committee that I do not work as hard as majority members—I hope you will forgive me if I am not as industrious, if I do not apply myself as earnestly to my duties and responsibilities as do the majority members.

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Mrs. CHURCH. I wonder if the gentleman would not like to put in the RECORD the amount of staff that the minority does have to help them with their reports.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, they have between 50 and 60.

Mrs. CHURCH. The minority side.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Oh, the minority. Oh, well, let me see. The committee very generously recently gave us an addition to our staff, so we have now one stenographer, and we have one lawyer, and then under the reorganization law we have a minority member of the full committee. So, to offset the work of the 60 staff members of the majority, we have three. It seems hardly fair to ask or expect the three to do as much as the 60 even if they have just as many hours to work. Yet that is the chairman's reasoning. Do you wonder sometimes why I give up and just come over here and kill time instead of remaining in the slave galley over there in the office building?

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will, to my very distinguished, lovable friend, the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHUDOFF. I would just like to get it in the RECORD so that the Members do not misunderstand. When you were chairman of the full committee and I think the gentlewoman from Illinois knows it also, you cut the staff to two and you wanted to pay them about $1,200 a year, and as the result of that, we had a subcommittee appointed, of which Mrs. CHURCH was a member, and we insisted at least on paying our two employees a living wage. You have twice as many as we had. You have four.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Your own subcommittee has four. Your full committee has 60 all told. Now, you know, there is an illustration of the extreme wisdom of my colleague. Well, the Reorganization Act fixed it so that on the committee there were ten and two of the ten are assigned to the minority, and that is exactly what happened then. It is exactly what happened this time under the chairmanship of the distinguished gentleman from Chicago [Mr. DAWSON]. And, I am not complaining about that. What I am talking about in this statement that we have just as much time, and the only inference I can draw from his additional views, is that our failure to get out reports is due to our lethargy and our indolence. What I am calling attention to is that we have three people altogether while they have 60. Now, I am just trying to defend myself from that charge of indolence. That is all I am doing, and I hope the House will not criticize me too greatly or too severely for that even though it appears the four of us cannot turn out as much as the 60 employees plus the efforts of the 17 majority members.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHELLEY].

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I rise in support of the bill. I want to point out, in answer to one of the questions asked, that a great many people eat fish. During World War II, the Government spent a great deal of money encouraging more people to eat fish in place of meat. It is not a special school program. We are already in special school programs in certain subjects. We are helping to support four State marine schools; we are helping to support State agricultural schools; and when we consider a commodity like fish, this is important.

The subject I wish to speak on out of order is this: I wrote a letter yesterday to the Secretary of Commerce protesting a situation which I think this House should be made acquainted with.

In 1950 the House by an overwhelming vote voted $350 million to build 50 fast mariner vessels for the use of the American merchant marine. They were extremely valuable; in fact, invaluable during the Korean war. The last eight of those vessels are now laid up. There are two American companies seeking to purchase them. Overnight the Federal Maritime Administrator and the Under Secretary of Commerce made an offer to the Navy to turn them over to the Navy. The Navy said they could use some of these vessels. But what is the Navy going to do with these vessels, costing from $8 million to $10 million to build? The Navy is going to spend $15 million per vessel to reconvert them to the kind of vessel they want and then put them in their lay-up fleet.

Here are two American companies—and one in particular on the Pacific Coast, which was the first one to buy these mariners—who want to buy them and spend an additional couple of million dollars to make them adequate for Far East and oriental service. They now find themselves boxed out.

I say that this is completely in contravention of the law enacted by Congress, that the matter is being delayed and dragged out until Congress is out of session so that the Department of Commerce can then do what they want.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHELLEY. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. BONNER. This situation came to pass because in an appropriation bill there was authority given to the Navy to reach into the reserve fleet and take such ships as they might desire without coming to Maritime or without consulting the Committee on the Merchant Marine. It is just another case where blanket authority was given in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHELLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted the gentleman from California has raised this question on the floor of the House. As a minority member of the subcommittee that appropriates for these ships, I want to say that I, too, have protested to the Navy and to the Secretary of Commerce transfers of these ships to the Navy.

The money was appropriated to build up our merchant fleet, which the gentleman and I think should be done. The subsidy money was appropriated for that purpose. If the Navy comes in and takes these ships actually what they are doing is relieving themselves of a $10 million appropriation on each ship so that the record will show that that money was not appropriated to them.

The fact is that the figures which I have checked will show that in the end it would cost the taxpayers of the United States about $23 million more if these ships are transfered instead of the Navy building ships for themselves. In other words, the Mariners cost about $9 million and the Navy is going to put about $15 million into each ship in order to put it into service when they could build these ships for $20 million.

I will say to the gentleman that I have protested to the Navy and only today talked about it to the Secretary of Commerce. I hope the transfer will not be made, because then it will be for the benefit of the American taxpayers and in the interest of building a better and greater merchant fleet for our people.

Mr. SHELLEY. I want to agree with my fellow member of the Committee on Appropriations and thank him for his comments.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. ALLEN of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of California. Following the protest expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. SHELLEY], I think it should be pointed out that if these ships are taken into operation by the privately operated merchant marine they will still be available for the use of the Navy and the country in time of war in just as much readiness as if the Navy takes them now.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I think it is time we got back to the simple and ancient art of fishing. I think there is a great deal that has been misunderstood about this bill and what it seeks to do. I am certain those people who have tried to drag a little levity into the debate did so unintentionally.

Fishing is important to this country, and fish is an important source of food. It represents a source of protein that cannot be very well gotten in other forms and in other places.

Who are the fishermen? They are the people on the Atlantic coast, up in the New England States, who are the descendants of fishermen. The fishermen on the Pacific coast and in other parts of the country have come to this country for the most part from those countries where fishing was traditional, such as Italy, Portugal, Yugoslavia, Spain, Norway, Sweden, and parts of England. On the west coast we add to that the Japanese, who are perhaps the greatest fishermen of all. We have cut off immigration and the source of fishermen naturally has dried up as we cut off that immigration.

I notice that Senator PURTELL in his statement on this bill in the Senate calls attention to the fact that the average age of the fishermen in New England now is around 59. When these men originally went to sea they did so in sail, or the boats were propelled by oars. Today the fishing practices have completely changed. Fishing is mechanized like everything else, but when we mechanized it we broadened it and increased the ability of people to take more and more fish. We have actually depleted some of the species as a result of that. What we have to do is bring those fish back. We have to study, intensify our study of fishing, just as, starting about the turn of the century, we started to intensively study agriculture. That is all we seek here.

Members are concerned about free education under this bill. You have vocational training under the George-Barden Act. Nearly every rural high school of any size in the country has courses that teach young boys, particularly in the field of agriculture, how to handle equipment and how to handle the mechanized tools of agriculture. That is all we are asking in this case. So that there is a need for fishing.

Let me tell you now something of my own experience in this field. At the outbreak of the war those in charge of defense threw nets across the entrance of every great harbor in this country. Two days after war was declared the Quartermaster Purchasing Agent in San Francisco sent to the Division of Fish and Game of California and asked for a conference. He said, "You have to intensify the fishing for sardines, because we need the fatty oil." We needed it for explosives. We were short on fatty oils. The oil of the country, the copra and the tung oil that was imported into this country, was cut off. We needed the canned fish products, too. And yet the Navy and the Army said, "You cannot fish. You cannot send boats to sea to fish." We had a series of conferences. I came on to Washington with some members of our Commission, and before we got through the Navy put special gates in these anti submarine nets. It opened the ports to fishing just as in England during the war. They had to fish. There they sent boats to sea in convoys under naval escort, to fish because fish was essential as a food. We are getting a rather late start in the fishing industry. But, think of its popularity in the restaurants throughout the country. I think some of the people, perhaps, who have been a little critical of it here today are the first ones who will go down to a restaurant and want to get a nice lobster or some shad or who will want some good Chesapeake Bay oysters. Yet, we do not know too much about how they breed or what we can do to preserve these fish and these species for the future. All we are doing is asking you to establish a program for a great historic industry just as you have established one for the agricultural industry.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true, for instance, in the case of oysters, that they contain a great deal of iron?

Mr. MILLER of California. Yes, and iodine too.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And that they are good for people with anemia?

Mr. MILLER of California. That is right.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. A great many people are not allowed to eat meat and have to eat fish and it is a very valuable food, almost a medicine in some cases.

Mr. MILLER of California. Not only is fish valuable food, but in the impact of civilization the fishing industry is hit very badly because pollution destroys more fish than anything that has been mentioned. We talk about the lamprey eel. Perhaps we have unbalanced Nature and have taken out one of the enemies of the lamprey eel that has held it in check heretofore. We stand to lose, for instance, our oyster fishery industry. Are we taking too many oysters and have we introduced some enemy in the form of pollution that is destroying them? Everyone is concerned about this. We have seen the sardine industry practically disappear from the Pacific coast although it is on its way back again.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. HALE. We are suffering a very serious depletion of our valuable clam resources in New England and we are quite concerned about that.

Mr. MILLER of California. That is going on right now. All we want to do is to find out why and we want to train people who will be skillful in conserving those resources and we want to have trained people who will go into the fishing industry to help.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I come from the Great Lakes area of our country. In the Great Lakes white fish have almost disappeared. Lake trout are also disappearing. If this program is for the purpose of helping to propagate and again seed the waters of our country with fish, the program is worthwhile because we are losing that industry in the Great Lakes.

Mr. MILLER of California. What we are seeking to do is to train men who can have the know-how and to make them available for the fishing industry just as you have economists and other people throughout the country in agriculture doing what they do for agriculture.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. BONNER. In connection with the Fish and Wildlife Service appearing before our committee on the subject of the lamprey eel in the Great Lakes, they stated they were unable to get scientists and sufficiently prepared men to carry on the studies for which the Congress has already made appropriations. In the rivers and in the interior waters, we are getting pollution and we do not have the proper men with the knowhow to handle the situation. That exists all over the country. So, this bill looks to the future to prepare men who will be qualified to carry on these studies and encourage the qualification of those men for this very work. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. I agree with the gentleman from California that pollution is killing the fishing industry and is driving the fish out of the waters.

Mr. MILLER of California. The gentleman has heard these statements before his committee in favor of pollution legislation or antipollution legislation which is something we need too.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. This discussion has been tremendously illuminating. Letters that I have received particularly from those engaged in fishing in the Great Lakes have been critical of it because it has been misunderstood that it would train scientists who would teach us how to catch more fish as contrasted to training scientists who would work on the preservation and building up of our fish population.

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for bringing that up, because perhaps I failed to stress it, but that is just what we think, we have got to conserve our fish resources and learn how to do it and teach others how to do it.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. It would be my hope that the studies would include the results of radioactivity that cannot help but be taking place when we launch a bomb over water. That water flows through all the oceans of the world before it gets through, and I trust very sincerely that there may be a study made much more extensive than has been made by the Atomic Energy Commission. The results of such a study would do much to give our people a sense of security.

Mr. MILLER of California. I would say to the gentlewoman from Ohio that that belongs in another field. What we are doing is tackling the biological problem and you do not solve any biological problem quickly. It takes long labor of patient trained people. We are trying to encourage such research.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. I want to thank the gentleman for his work in the matter.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Chairman, last week when the House was considering H. R. 11708, a bill to amend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, I offered an amendment to that bill which the House adopted.

The bill, as it read before the adoption of my amendment, would have permitted barter of our surplus agricultural commodities with the Soviet satellite nations.

My amendment prohibited such barter and all commerce with all Communist- or Communist-dominated nations. In speaking in favor of this amendment, I said that in my opinion trade or barter with any of the satellite nations would essentially be benefiting the Soviet Union.

The House passed my amendment to prohibit any barter of our surplus agricultural commodities with all Communist nations.

The conference report—House Report No. 2903—did not include the proposal sponsored by Secretary of State Dulles to authorize the barter of our surplus agricultural commodities with the Communist captive nations. The report did not include my amendment to prohibit such barter. The net result is that barter of our surplus agricultural commodities with any Communist or Communist-dominated countries is prohibited.

I talked with the conferees who represented the House and since the time is short before the end of this session and because I accomplished the objective which I intended, to forbid barter of our surplus agricultural commodities with the satellite nations, I made no objection to the conference report.

I think the Members of the House who supported my amendment are to be congratulated for we have defeated the effort to open barter relationships with the Communist-dominated countries.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, this bill is urgently needed for the Nation and the industry. This bill is urgently required by the fishing industry which is presently experiencing so many difficult problems. Those who are familiar with this industry recognize that the solutions to these problems must be approached on a broad front. This measure will make a contribution to that end.

Under this bill the Secretary of the Interior will be authorized to make grants to certain States in order to promote the education and training of professionally trained personnel in the varied aspects of the industry. If the provisions of this bill had been in operation many years ago, many of our problems would not now be with us. I strongly recommend that it be enacted.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCINTIRE].

Mr. MCINTIRE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this legislation. Maine has 2,400 miles of coastline. We invite you to share our scenery, but let me say also there are many of our people who engage in fishing for their livelihood. They are very much interested in this bill.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON].

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I think this proposition of making a study of the depletion of shellfish and other kinds of fish is something that we are probably making too late. For instance, herring come into our streams down where I live every spring and spawn. No one ever sees those herring after they leave in October when they catch them as sardines. No one ever sees them again for 3 years. No one knows from where they come or where they go.

Take the eel. Some people say the eel comes from the Sargasso Sea, but we do not know; no one has been able to find out.

There are many other problems of the fishing industry about which we should have more scientific knowledge. Could we know more about their life and habits we could manage and conserve this resource much more effectively.

The gentleman from Maine said that the clam situation in Maine was bad. It is worse in Massachusetts. I can remember when we used to get thousands of bushels a month and ship them all over the eastern seaboard, yet for the last 8 years there has been hardly a clam or a soft-shell crab on the Massachusetts shores. They are coming back, however, but no one knows why, either why they are coming back or why they left. We used to catch a lot of bluefish but now we do not get any bluefish at all—maybe once in a while one. We would like to know why. Some say it is because they do not get the bait, the old porgies, that used to come in from the Atlantic Ocean.

What the cause is we do not know, but we do know we have not the fish but need them.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. PELLY].

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Chairman, if you will look at this bill and read it through carefully, you will realize it has tremendous possibilities and will not cost the taxpayers any money in the long run. Actually, in the State of Washington we have I believe the only school of fisheries that gives a degree to its graduates. Our graduates are greatly sought after by the Department of the Interior and by the various State fisheries departments. But there are not enough of these trained graduates. When these men get to working for the States they do a great work in clearing the lakes and streams of various kinds of undesirable fish and replanting with sports fish. The sportsmen are very much interested in this legislation.

It is late in the afternoon, but let me address myself to those who are interested in economy. Let me give you some examples of how this legislation will actually make money. I can cite to you from our part of the country, the Pacific Northwest, one particular example, where the scientists who are trained by such schools of fisheries studied and recommended a program to eliminate an impediment to a run of salmon. The United States, I believe, contributed $5 million with Canada toward a British Columbia Canadian project. As a result of the work that was done on the Frazier River, 4 years later when the salmon run was restored by science to that stream the fishermen in my State of Washington alone in 1 year took $16 million worth of sockeye salmon. Likewise, with reference to the Great Lakes where the sea lamprey has eliminated trout and other fish, that fishery was worth $5 million a year and trained men in time will restore it.

What we need are scientists and trained personnel to get out and find the sources of the problem for the disappearance of fish and I think those of you who voted before for this bill when it passed the House recently under suspension of the rules, 250 to 130, but not enough under the two-thirds rule, should gather around now and support this as a piece of good legislation.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PELLY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. Inasmuch as the gentleman has mentioned the sea lamprey situation of the Great Lakes it should be understood that the House just recently in a supplemental appropriation bill appropriated funds for the purpose of eradication of the lamprey eel. I do want the gentleman to understand that I am supporting this bill and I concur in his statements.

Mr. PELLY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] realizes this problem. What we seek to do is to get more scientists and technicians to utilize a little in the way of appropriations both Federal and State and return a great deal on the investment we would put in.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply interested in this legislation. As a matter of fact, I introduced one of these bills. People from the Bureau of Fisheries have testified in hearings before the other body in favor of this proposal. Nobody doubts the value of research when it comes to medical science and the prevention and cure of disease, and so forth. I do not know why anybody would be skeptical about the value of research in connection with our food supply.

When I was a child anybody in Maine could go down to the beach with a little clam hoe and bring home a mess of clams for supper. Now they are almost gone.

One of the best things that has happened in the State of Maine was that we did get some appropriations awhile ago for a little research on that situation. As the gentleman from Masachusetts has said, there is some promise of ameliorating that situation.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this is a very important piece of legislation. The cost is trivial compared to the results that may be obtained. I hope this bill will pass the House by an overwhelming vote.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman spoke of clams. I know that lobsters are not nearly so plentiful as they were when I was a child, and they are having difficulty getting a plentiful supply off the Maine coast.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken may revise and extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants, out of funds appropriated for the purposes of this section, to public and nonprofit private universities and colleges in the several States and Territories of the United States for such purposes, including the establishment of scholarships, as may be necessary to promote the education and training of professionally trained personnel (including technicians and teachers) needed in the field of commercial fishing. Any amount appropriated for the purposes of this section shall be apportioned on an equitable basis, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, among the several States and Territories for the purpose of making grants within each such State and Territory. In making such apportionment the Secretary of the Interior shall take into account the extent of the fishing industry within each State and Territory as compared with the total fishing industry of the United States (including Territories), and such other factors as may be relevant in view of the purposes of this section. The Secretary of the Interior may establish such guides and curricula for educational courses as may be necessary for the purposes of this section.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated not in excess of $550,000 for the fiscal year beginning on July 1, 1956, and for each fiscal year thereafter for the purposes of this section.

(c) The Secretary of the Interior may establish such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, following the word "purposes", delete ", including the establishment of scholarships,".

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few questions I should like to ask concerning this legislation, which calls for the spending of $1 million a year in perpetuity to teach people about fish and how to catch them. We have had numerous explanations, but what do you propose to do; train people how to catch fish, train technicians, or what? What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BONNER. The bill speaks for itself. It is to prepare men for scientific studies in the propagation and study of fish and fish life, just as you prepare men in other vocations. In addition to other things, the bill carries an extension of the program in high-school work, for young men who may be interested in this subject.

Mr. GROSS. I want to get at that, too. What is going to be the educational requirement? There are no basic requirements or standards in this bill.

Mr. BONNER. The gentleman knows what was done in the agricultural colleges, to prepare the county agents and people of that kind, to know more about agriculture. This bill has the same purpose, to teach young men something about fish and fish life, just as in the extension course in the agricultural college.

Mr. GROSS. One of the gentlemen who preceded me, and spoke in behalf of the measure, said that with immigration having reduced, fishermen were not coming from foreign countries to this country. To the contrary, immigration has been increased, but is the purpose of this bill to teach people how to catch fish or to do just what?

Mr. BONNER. It would imply all of those things, yes; to study the movement of fish in deep water, exploration of places where fish go, and how to go about getting more fish.

Mr. GROSS. Did not the House just the other day pass a bill providing for a brand new Assistant Secretary in the Department of the Interior to head up the Fish and Wildlife Service; and was there not a Division of Fishing Industry created there for the first time? And is there not going to be a Director appointed over there and a number of technical and scientific employees?

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted the chairman asked that question. It is difficult to get the right kind of people, people properly qualified in the Fish and Wildlife Service, to carry out the authorizations and appropriations that we have made. The purpose here is to bring up young men who will be qualified in this field. In one State they had a large river that became very much polluted, or something happened to it, and the fish were dying by the thousands.

Mr. GROSS. Is this a stream-pollution bill or a bill to teach people how to catch fish?

Mr. BONNER. If the gentleman would wait a minute, I should be glad to tell him. We had one man, an ichthyologist, to go there and make a study. It would take 3 or 4 years to make that kind of a study. We finally got this man to that place, and he is in great demand all over the country.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I am not very much impressed by that argument.

Mr. BONNER. I am sorry.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman has not yet answered my question as to whether you are going to try to train people to catch fish or whether you are going to train technicians, scientific people, and so forth. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Where is this money going to be expended?

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. As far as specific institutions are concerned, I do not know where it will go any more than we knew when we established the agricultural program in this country. Let me say in all sincerity to the gentleman who has raised some very interesting questions that I did say that immigration had been cut off and that that took away from us people who used to come to this country, who were fishermen. We have to train men from the ground up in the business, just as we had to train people in agriculture.

The gentleman has a great agricultural school at Ames, Iowa. We have a great one in California. There is not a State that does not have a great agricultural school. They are pouring people continuously into the field of agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

(Mr. GROSS asked and was given permission to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GROSS. I yield further to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. Then we have schools in vocational training which we can use in this program, to teach people, for instance, how to make nets; for instance, there is the field of refrigeration in the fishing industry, where we lack trained people. I am just trying to think of a few practical examples. The same type of problems existed in agriculture when we had to train people to go out and do scientific work in that field.

Mr. GROSS. If this bill is for the purpose of teaching people how to make fish nets, we are getting far afield and mighty reckless with the taxpayers' money.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me again?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BONNER. If the gentleman will read the bill he will see on page 1, line 3—and this is in answer to the gentleman's question—

That (a) the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants, out of funds appropriated for the purposes of this section, to public and nonprofit private universities and colleges in the several States and Territories of the United States—

For the following purposes. Now that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. GROSS. Are you going to establish a course in fishing at the Iowa State College?

Mr. BONNER. Is the gentleman's college interested in getting a grant or a scholarship for this purpose?

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman knows the answer is that there would not be a course in fishing established there because there is not money enough in this bill to begin to go around, if courses in fishing were dished out to all the State colleges and universities in the United States.

As to vocational training, the State of Iowa carries its full share of the cost but the States benefited by this bill would make no contribution whatever.

Mr. BONNER. I agree with the gentleman there is not enough money to spread around to all the States.

Mr. GROSS. Why does not the fishing industry take an interest in this training and defray part or all of the cost?

This is a strange committee report. The report on page 1 deals with this bill, and then from page 2 on it deals with tariffs and the distress of the New England textile industry.

I sympathize with the New England textile industry. It is having a hard time there days, but to the people of New England who are having this trouble I would say, "If most of your Representatives were not voting to spend so much money on the foreign WPA extravaganza, teaching people in foreign countries and providing them with the machinery to make and export textiles, you would not be in the trouble you are in now." Join me next year in cutting the foreign handout bill, and you will not be in so much trouble with your industries.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman was told this was a bill to teach people how to catch fish. I understood it was to teach them how and where and when not to catch fish, so that the fish could grow larger and happy families to be caught later. Will the gentleman follow that up with these experts? I thought it was to teach people how and where and when not to get the fish.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman, but I still cannot tell the gentleman just what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. PILLION. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not there has been any request from the various conservation departments of the 48 States for this money?

Mr. GROSS. I certainly have had no request from the Department of Conservation of Iowa for this legislation.

Mr. PILLION. Can anyone tell us how many research scientists we will need in the next 10 years in the various State conservation departments, and whether or not this $1 million per year is enough or too much to fill the needs of the 48 States and the Federal Fish and Wildlife Service?

Mr. GROSS. Perhaps the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Washington can tell the gentleman. I certainly cannot answer the question.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that a valid case for this legislation has not been made. It wraps around the necks of all the taxpayers a bill of $1 million a year for all time, plus the millions that will be spent through the new Division of Fisheries in the Department of the Interior. This is ridiculous and reckless legislation of which we already have too much in this session of Congress.

If there is not to be a rollcall vote, let the record show my vote against this bill.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 (a) of the Vocational Education Act of 1946 is amended by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) $375,000 for vocational education in the fishery trades and industry and distributive occupations therein, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories on an equitable basis, as determined by the United States Commissioner of Education after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, taking into account the extent of the fishing industry of each State and Territory as compared with the total fishing industry of the United States (including Territories)."

(b) Section 3 (b) of such act is amended by striking out "paragraphs (1) to (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) to (5)."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HAYS of Arkansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10433) to promote the fishing industry in the United States and its Territories by providing for the training of needed personnel for such industry, pursuant to House Resolution No. 612, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for a division.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING AND CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF URBAN COMMUNITIES

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11742) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and development of urban communities, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SPENCE, BROWN of Georgia, PATMAN, RAINS, WOLCOTT, GAMBLE, and TALLE.

CORRECTIONS IN H. R. 7619

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 275), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7619), to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to make the following corrections:

In section 104 (a), strike out subsection (b) following section 104 (a) (4) and insert the said subsection (b) immediately preceding section 105.

In section 118, strike out "116" and insert "117."

In section 9 (d) of the amendment made by section 401, strike out "first or second" and insert in lieu thereof "second or third."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING TRAINING OF NEEDED PERSONNEL FOR FISHING INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill H. R. 10433. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] has asked for a division.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GROSS) there were—yeas 82, nays 37.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2379) to promote the fishing industry in the Uinted States and its Territories by providing for the training of needed personnel for such industry, which is a similar bill to the bill just passed by the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants, out of funds appropriated for the purposes of this section, to public and nonprofit private universities and colleges in the several States and Territories of the United States for such purposes, including the establishment of scholarships, as may be necessary to promote the education and training of professionally trained personnel (including scientists, technicians, and teachers) needed in the field of commercial fisheries. Any amount appropriated for the purposes of this section shall be apportioned on an equitable basis, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, among the several States and Territories for the purpose of making grants within each such State and Territory. In making such apportionment the Secretary of the Interior shall take into account the extent of the fishing industry within each State and Territory as compared with the total fishing industry of the United States (including Territories), and such other factors as may be relevant in view of the purposes of this section. The Secretary of the Interior may establish such guides and curricula for educational courses as may be necessary for the purposes of this section.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated not in excess of $550,000 for the fiscal year beginning on July 1, 1955, and for each fiscal year thereafter for the purposes of this section.

(c) The Secretary of the Interior may establish such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(d) The several States and Territories, in order to receive the benefits of this section, shall be required to match by State or local funds or both 100 percent of the appropriations made under authority of this section.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 (a) of the Vocational Education Act of 1946 is amended by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) $550,000 for vocational education and extensive service in the fishery trades and industry and distributive occupations therein, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories on an equitable basis, as determined by the United States Commissioner of Education after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, taking into account the extent of the fishing industry of each State and Territory as compared with the total fishing industry of the United States (including Territories)."

(b) Section 3 (b) of such act is amended by striking out "paragraphs (1) to (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) to (5)."

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BONNER: Strike out all after the enacting clause of S. 2379 and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of the bill, H. R. 10433, as passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

At the request of Mr. BONNER, and by unanimous consent, the proceedings whereby the bill, H. R. 10433, was passed were vacated and that bill was laid on the table.

WATER CONTRACT WITH THE CITY OF RAPID CITY, S. DAK.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3468) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to amend certain contracts providing for the furnishing of water to the city of Rapid City, S. Dak., for municipal purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to amend contracts numbered IIr-1413 and 14-06-W-51, dated respectively July 27, 1943, and October 20, 1952, and entered into with the city of Rapid City, S. Dak., for the furnishing of water by the Government for municipal purposes, to such extent as he may deem necessary to secure to the holders of revenue bonds, hereafter issued by said city to finance certain essential improvements to its water system, a first priority to revenues derived from the sale of water supplied to said city pursuant to such contracts. The priority authorized in this act shall be limited to revenue bonds the face value of which does not exceed $2,500,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAULINE H. CORBETT

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Pauline H. Corbett, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

R. 3957) entitled "An Act for the relief of Pauline H. Corbett," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

The bill as passed by the House would authorize an appropriation of $18,716.97 to Pauline H. Corbett, Charleston, W. Va., in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of severe personal injuries and disabilities sustained by her as a result of an overdosage of streptomycin which she received while a patient at the Tokyo Army Hospital, Tokyo, Japan, from November 2 to 28, 1950, as a civilian employee of the General Headquarters, Far East Command, United States Army, engaged in a nonappropriated fund activity.

The Senate increased the sum to $38,317.19, and at the conference this sum was agreed upon.

HAROLD D. DONOHUE,
WILLIAM E. MILLER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FLOOD CONTROL FOR MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, in these closing moments of the 84th Congress, I would like to summarize the activities of the Massachusetts Congressional Delegation Committee on Flood Prevention and Relief, on which I was honored and privileged to serve as chairman. This brief report cannot enumerate the many activities of the committee, nor can it record all of the results stemming from our sustained, intensive, cooperative effort waged for our State and area regardless of party affiliations or partisan considerations. The chief motivation of our work was the welfare of our State and area and Nation.

In all modesty and humility, our committee merely wishes to state that a check of the objectives outlined by the committee at the outset, and during the course, of our work, will disclose the virtual 100 percent completion of our legislative and administrative program.

In the Congress, as a result of our joint efforts and the generous assistance of our colleagues, we were able to secure favorable action for practically our entire announced program. Only in a few nonemergency or detail matters did our obectives fall short. This was more than offset by the fact that our objectives were actually exceeded in other instances. We can all be proud of this accomplishment, but without the help of many other people, it would not have been possible.

In the committee's name, and in the name of the entire Massachusetts delegation in Congress, I desire to express our deep appreciation and heartfelt thanks to the President, the very many Members of Congress, the Speaker, majority leader and minority leader of the House, the leaders and Members of the Senate, the agencies, private and public, and to the very many individuals who rendered us such splendid, effective assistance. We are eternally grateful to all.

To my own colleagues on the committee, I tender deep thanks for their invaluable help without which the results achieved would never have been possible. I am proud of and thankful indeed to our entire Massachusetts delegation. It is indeed a great one, and representative of the best traditions of our historic Commonwealth, the Congress and the Nation.

I cannot stress too strongly the splendid assistance and great public service regarding our flood relief and rehabilitation measures of the distinguished majority leader, JOHN W. MCCORMACK, and the distinguished minority leader, JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR.

FLOOD RELIEF

The disaster relief operations undertaken by the Army engineers immediately after the August floods are now nearly completed. All eligible work has been finished or will be under contract by the end of this month.

The total amount channeled into Massachusetts by the Army engineers for disaster relief operations is $7,253,000.

The engineers assisted Massachusetts in three different ways under the Operation Noah disaster program: (a) reimbursement for expenditures made by the Commonwealth or local communities in their initial relief operations; (b) contributions toward the permanent repair or reconstruction of public facilities; and (c) emergency repairs and debris cleanup performed by the engineers through the employment of private contractors throughout the damaged areas.

The engineers have paid, or are in the final process of paying, a total of $2,700,000 to the Commonwealth and to the local communities for reimbursements—item (a) above.

For contributions, the engineers are paying, or are in the process of making final payment, a total of $553,000—item (b) above.

For direct work by the engineers performed by local contractors, the engineers will have paid by the time the last contract is completed a total of $4 million—item (c) above.

The committee and the entire Massachusetts delegation in Congress desire to commend that sterling military leader, Brig. Gen. Robert J. Fleming, Jr., the New England Division Engineer, and his entire staff, for the outstanding work performed throughout the flood devastated areas of the Commonwealth under the Operation Noah program. This work was most difficult. The engineers did a tremendous job and this committee unanimously expresses its sincere gratitude—a sentiment profoundly shared I am sure by our entire Massachusetts congressional delegation as well as delegations of other flood-stricken States, by our beloved Commonwealth and by all our people. This effective operation is another instance of the brilliant leadership, smooth-functioning efficiency, readiness, and humanitarian spirit of our great Corps of Engineers.

CONNECTICUT RIVER BASIN

As a result of action by the 84th Congress, an expedited flood-prevention program will be undertaken in the Connecticut River Basin, the most ambitious since the Federal Government moved into the flood-control picture in 1936.

Congress has provided $6,120,000 for flood works in the Connecticut Basin. These funds will make it possible to begin construction of five new projects and start the planning of another. In addition, the Congress has granted authorization for the badly needed Littleville Dam and Reservoir on the middle branch of the Westfield in Massachusetts.

The new construction and the amount appropriated by Congress in the 1956–57 Civil Works appropriation bill are as follows:

Ball Mountain, Vt., $2,300,000; Otter Brook, N. H., $1,250,000; Barre Falls, Mass., $1,150,000 Townshend, Vt., $620,000, and North Springfield, Vt., $500,000.

Planning funds in the amount of $300,000 have been appropriated for the North Hartland, Vt., Dam and Reservoir.

These Vermont projects will do much, in the estimation of the Army engineers, in reducing floods on downsteam points of the Connecticut in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Congressional authorization for the Littleville Dam in this session of the Congress will advance by many months the planning and construction of this project. The Army engineers have prepared a preliminary plan for Littleville, which calls for the construction of a dam on the middle branch of the Westfield River in Huntington and Chester, Mass. The reservoir would extend upstream a distance of 3 miles and lie in Huntington and Chester. The project would be solely in the interests of flood control.

The engineers estimate that the project would reduce flood heights at downstream locations, including Westfield and West Springfield, Mass., and Hartford, Conn.

The estimated cost of the project is $5,090,000.

The committee and the delegation will press for the inclusion of planning funds in the 1957–58 Civil Works appropriation bill when the 85th Congress convenes next January.

Construction on one of these projects, Barre Falls in Massachusetts, has already begun. Groundbreaking ceremonies were held in Barre on June 15.

BLACKSTONE BASIN

The Congress appropriated $1,940,000 for flood-control work in the Blackstone Basin. Of this amount, $1 million is for the Woonsocket channel improvement project.

Work will be started on the Worcester diversion tunnel project, for which $840,000 has been appropriated.

The delegation was successful in obtaining $100,000 in planning funds for the West Hill Dam and Reservoir in Upton, a project which will have considerable flood-reducing effect on downstream points of the Blackstone. The House voted this amount in the Civil Works appropriation bill, but the item was deleted by the Senate because of the lack of State concurrence.

Governor Herter notified the delegation and the Army engineers of State approval of West Hill in June and it was possible for us to have the $100,000 reinstated in the bill by the conferees.

In addition, the Congress has appropriated $30,000 for needed survey of the Blackstone Basin as part of the Army engineers' Northeast flood studies, a continuing survey to cost about $2 million for the whole Northeast before completion.

General Fleming has stated that recommendations will be submitted to Congress calling for permanent flood-control improvements in the Blackstone Basin upon completion of these surveys.

THAMES BASIN

The greatest damage in Massachusetts occurred in the Thames Basin last August.

Three of four authorized flood-control projects in Massachusetts will be started this year with funds made available by the Congress.

A total of $2,400,000 has been appropriated for these Massachusetts projects: Buffumville, $1,200,000; East Brimfield, $840,000, and Hodges Village, $360,000, all construction funds.

The Massachusetts delegation sought planning funds for Westville, a companion project to East Brimfield to protect Southbridge. According to the Army engineers, however, it is more feasible from an engineering standpoint to defer the planning and construction of the Westville dam and reservoir until such time as the East Brimfield project is in the advanced construction stages. The engineers state that deferred action on Westville will do away with the need for a coffer dam, which would be required if both projects were constructed at the same time.

The invitation for bids for the construction of the Buffumville Dam were issued this month by the Army engineers. The bids will be opened on or about August 17. Construction will get under way soon thereafter.

MERRIMACK BASIN

Through the energetic efforts of our beloved colleague Congresswoman EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, in which the entire Massachusetts delegation joined, $50,000 was appropriated for the planning of the Hopkinton-Everett Dam and Reservoir in New Hampshire, which, when constructed, will have considerable flood-reducing effect on downstream points of the Merrimack in Massachusetts.

In addition, $11,000 has been made available by the Congress this year for surveys of the Merrimack and its tributaries as part of the northeast flood study.

NAVIGATION AND BEACH EROSION

The entire Massachusetts delegation in Congress actively supported and worked for needed navigation and beach erosion projects with the result that the Commonwealth this year will see the beginning of a $4½ million program.

Eight new projects will be undertaken under the supervision of the Army engineers: Boston Harbor extension to 40-foot anchorage, $1 million; Cape Cod Canal, $157,000; Chatham Stage Harbor, $167,000; Fall River Harbor, $500,000; Nantucket Harbor, $162,000; Newburyport Harbor, $143,000; Revere Beach, $75,000, and Weymouth Fore River, $500,000.

In addition, the Congress appropriated $1,500,000 for the Mystic River 35-foot channel project and $302,000 for the Town River navigation project, continuing projects from previous years.

FLOOD SURVEYS

In its initial report last November, the committee recommended emergency funds to complete engineering studies on key flood control projects in the whole Northeast.

Congress supported the delegation in these efforts by providing $330,000 in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill in February and $381,000 in the regular flood control appropriation bill in June for the so-called Northeast flood study, a continuing flood survey of all devastated Northeast flood areas which will cost about $2 million before completion.

Of the $330,000 appropriated in February, $130,000 is being used for New England flood studies. The following is the breakdown, by basin, of this amount:

Connecticut, $50,000; Merrimack, $1,000; Thames, $20,000; Housatonic, $39,000, and Blackstone, $20,000.

New England will be apportioned $120,000 of the $381,000 made available in the regular appropriation bill for the Northeast flood study. Following are the basins and amount allocated for each:

Connecticut, $20,000; Merrimack, $10,000; Thames, $20,000; Housatonic, $30,000; Blackstone, $10,000; coastal streams, including the Charles and Neponset in Massachusetts, $10,000, and rivers in Maine, $20,000.

BUSH-M'CORMACK BILL

The 84th Congress enacted most desirable legislation in the passage of the Bush-McCormack bill which was originated by the distinguished majority leader, Mr. MCCORMACK. This law will now make it possible for the Army engineers to go ahead with small flood prevention projects, up to $400,000, without specific congressional authorization.

Prior to passage of the Bush-McCormack bill, the Army engineers were limited to expenditures of $150,000 on individual small projects authorized by section 212 of the Flood Control Act of 1950. Up to $400,000 may now be spent on any one project so long as it meets the basic requirements of the 1950 act—the project must be complete within itself, be economically justified and not be in an area intended to be protected by a larger flood control project.

Congress appropriated $2 million in the supplemental appropriation bill to carry out provisions of the Bush-McCormack bill. In addition, $2½ million was appropriated in the regular 1956–57 fiscal year flood control works appropriation bill for small authorized projects.

General Fleming has stated that as work progresses on the Northeast flood study, locations will be found on New England streams where Bush-McCormack flood projects may be authorized. Before he can recommend expenditures of Federal funds at these locations, it will be necessary to accomplish considerable detailed field and office work. In all cases, a brief report will be required showing the cost and economic justification for the work.

The committee has recommended that surveys of the following basins be made for permanent flood prevention works under provisions of the Bush-McCormack bill: Connecticut, Thames, Blackstone, Merrimac, Charles, Neponset, Housatonic, Hoosic, Ipswich, Mystic and other streams in the State.

WATERSHED PROTECTION

In its inital report to the delegation, the committee cited the newly enacted Watershed Protection Act—Public Law 566, 83d Congress—as a possible source of flood relief for smaller areas in the Commonwealth where large engineer flood control projects are not contemplated.

While the program is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, such projects need not be confined to agricultural regions alone because some watershed protection projects in residential and industrial communities can be included so long as there is a relationship to soil conservation, land utilization and flood prevention.

The committee again brings to the attention of our Massachusetts communities, troubled with periodic floods, the potential value of the USDA Watershed Protection program in helping to solve local flood problems.

The 84th Congress has made substantial changes in the original law, which called for matching funds from local beneficiaries of watershed protection projects. These changes now require the Federal Government to bear all the cost of construction for flood protection. The soil conservation and land utilization aspects of the program will continue on a matching basis with the Federal Government bearing up to about one-half of the cost.

The objective of the watershed protection program is to reduce the peak flow of floods through small dams, cut down on the flow of silt, debris and rubbish, halt soil erosion, build up moisture in the subsoil of farms and keep wells from going dry.

Two watershed projects in Massachusetts are progressing under the provisions of Public Law 566. One is in the Town River Basin and the other, sponsored by the Suasco Watershed Association, is located in the Sudbury, Assabet and Concord River Basins.

WEATHER RESEARCH

The committee successfully worked for additional funds for the United States Weather Bureau to improve forecasting and storm warnings. In addition, the committee pressed for the inclusion of funds for special hurricane studies to be undertaken by the Army engineers in cooperation with other Federal agencies. The Congress appropriated $1,400,000 for those engineer hurricane studies.

FLOOD INSURANCE

One of the final actions taken by this Congress to assist flood disaster areas was the adoption of a flood-insurance program backed by the Federal Government, which was urged by the delegation after the August floods. We had envisaged a much broader disaster insurance bill, but the bill enacted is a good start in the field and will permit future necessary experimentation and subsequent sound expansion of the program consistent with our free private enterprise system.

The supplemental appropriation bill contains $500,000 to get this $5 billion flood insurance program underway. The experimental 5-year program includes direct Federal insurance policies when private corporations fail to provide the needed insurance. The Federal Government otherwise would reinsure policies issued by private insurance companies.

The program at this time sets a $10,000 limit for insurance on private homes and a $250,000 limitation on policies held by an individual or company. Authority is provided to issue or insure $3 billion in flood insurance policies with discretionary authorization to the President to increase this amount by $2 billion more if necessary.

In addition, Congress authorized, as part of the flood insurance program, a $2 billion loan program, which can be increased by $500 million by the President. The loans carry a 4 percent interest rate and would be available to those who sign flood loan contracts in advance with the Government.

PERSONNEL SHORTAGE

One of the problems facing the Army engineers in connection with an expedited flood-control program for New England is the shortage of engineering personnel. In his testimony to the House and Senate Appropriations Committee, General Fleming stated a substantial number of vacancies in his engineering staff could be filled immediately. However, with the intensive recruiting being carried on by private industry for engineering help, the problem is most difficult and complex.

The volume of work for the New England Division is such that it has been necessary for the Army engineers to allocate the design work for several New England flood-control projects to Division offices of the engineers in other parts of the country.

For instance, design work on the North Hartland Dam in Vermont is being done by the Army engineers in Portland, Oreg. The Townshend, Vt., dam design is being prepared by the Garrison, N. Dak., Division engineer staff. The design of the Hodges Village Dam and Reservoir in Massachusetts is now being prepared by the staff of the Division engineer in Seattle, Wash. The East Brimfield Dam and Reservoir project in Massachusetts has its design work being done by the Buffalo, N. Y., Division engineer. The work for the North Springfield, Vt., dam is being prepared by the Division engineer at Omaha, Nebr.

The committee recommends that every effort be made to bring wage schedules for engineers and other technical specialists more in keeping with the salaries being paid in private industry. If this is not done, the shortage of qualified engineers in the field of public works will become more acute, thus negating the efforts of the New England delegation in Congress to obtain an accelerated flood-control program for the region.

The following is a tabulation of Massachusetts flood-control projects, showing congressional appropriations for the 1955–56 fiscal year before the August floods and appropriations made by Congress after the floods in the Urgent Deficiency and 1956–57 fiscal year appropriation bills:

EDUCATION OF MENTALLY RETARDED CHILDREN

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, on April 18, 1956, I introduced H. R. 10620 which would implement and continue our assistance to the large number of mentally retarded in this country who cannot presently realize their potential as useful adjusted citizens. When passed, it will represent a very vital act of recognition that mentally retarded children in America have the same rights as other children to grow and develop to the fullest of their abilities. Only in the past 10 years has this principle obtained general acceptance.

I had hoped that this bill would pass this session of Congress. However, after checking with members of the Committee on Education and Labor and the chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], I am sorry to inform the Members of the House that no action will be taken this year. I have been assured by the chairman of the committee that hearings would be granted early next year and I am confident that the committee will report out this bill and pass it in the early days of the next session of Congress.

It was almost exactly 2 years ago that the House Subcommittee on Appropriations called your attention to the tragic nature of mental retardation and proposed that the Federal Government join the States and various organizations and individuals in an effort to prevent or mitigate this problem. Congress rapidly responded to this proposal and approved an increase of $750,000 in appropriations for the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness and the National Institute of Mental Health which would be specifically devoted to initiation of a program of research leading to the eventual elimination of mental retardation. I might mention in passing that actual research undertaken by these Institutes in this area now considerably exceeds that original sum and the research attack on mental retardation has assumed major proportions.

It may be remembered that the Congress assumed this responsibility in the face of exceedingly tragic facts. There are now four and a half million retarded children and adults in the United States. Mental retardation is 10 times more common than poliomyelitis or cerebral palsy, and this handicapped population is growing at a rate of 130,000 new additions yearly. Only a small percentage of these children will obtain an education, be able to undertake more than unskilled labor for their support, or be capable of taking part in the normal activities of the average person. As our birth rate accelerates and as medical skills further reduce infant mortality, it is probable that the numbers of retarded born each year will increase further.

In making funds available 2 years ago for the research attack on mental retardation, the Congress was guided by a philosophy which has been basic to our support of research on all disorders during the past decade. We have realized that an attempt to render complete medical, educational, and rehabilitative services throughout our future to all the afflicted and disabled in this country on a permanent basis would involve sums far beyond our ability to bear them. Such services, however, are necessary and must be provided insofar as we are able, for they mitigate the problems of disease, though they do not eliminate them entirely. Through research, however, we are taking the most realistic steps toward the final prevention of premature death and disability.

Investment in research has, in fact, served us well. During the past decade we have seen the virtual control of the infectious diseases and the beginnings of control of some of the chronic disorders. Science, of course, can make no predictions concerning the ultimate conquest of mental retardation, but progress thus far has been heartening. Science has begun to understand some of the causes of infant brain damage, and prevention of mental retardation thereby has become an actuality in some instances. Thus, physicians no longer X-ray mothers in the first three months of gestation, and during the same period of the brain's most active development both physician and mother are particularly on guard against German measles. Science has also found that complete recirculation of blood in the newborn Rh incompatible child has been found to virtually eliminate kernicterus, a disease previously leading to cerebral palsy and mental retardation in approximately 1,000 newborn infants every year.

The present research attack on mental retardation promises even greater gains. This research primarily focuses on determining a large number of unknown factors governing the fate of embryonic brain during pregnancy. Scientists are studying the entire history of human pregnancy in order to elucidate those environmental influences such as abnormal metabolism and nutrition in the mother which may lead to mental retardation in the child. Direct investigations of the developing embryo can be made on experimental animals, and a variety of techniques have already been developed to induce intellectual deficits in animals and to measure the extent of those deficits.

Promising as such research is, however, there is no question that the conquest of mental retardation, like the conquest of other disorders, will be achieved only after considerable effort. We should remember that the research attack on mental retardation has barely begun. Morever, since it is likely that mental retardation is due to many causes, it is probable that progress to our ultimate goal will only come through slow, step-by-step progress.

This prospect, of course, does not hold out great hope to those who are mentally retarded now and to those who are responsible for their care. It is our evident responsibility, therefore, to do whatever is humanly possible to provide care, training, and rehabilitation to the mentally retarded at the present time. We know that mental retardation is not a hopeless condition and that, in fact, only a small number suffer such loss of intellectual capability as to be helpless. Out of every 100 exceptional individuals, only 5 percent show a severe loss in intellectual capacity; but the 20 percent moderately retarded and the 75 percent mildly retarded can and must receive those services which will grant them the maximum economic and social adjustment to society.

They must receive them, for otherwise large numbers of them will become public charges, and their lives wasted in institutions. And it is well to remember that each institutionalized retarded child costs society $50,000 during his lifetime.

Traditionally, direct services to the disabled have been the responsibility of State and local communities and of those remarkable associations and individuals who dedicate themselves to humane works. During the past decade we have seen them assume these responsibilities more and more on behalf of the retarded child. Diagnostic and treatment clinics have sprung up throughout the United States; special nursery schools and special educational classes within city school systems have been established, and sheltered workshops and vocational rehabilitation programs have been organized. Many children who would otherwise have been helpless cripples are now capable of undertaking some of the activities of daily living and of achieving some degree of economic independence.

The fact remains, however, that while rapid advances have been made in the general and special education of retarded children, the need is still much greater than the achievement. Approximately 950,000 of the 1 million retarded children of school age can profitably be educated, but less than 200,000 of them are either enrolled in special public school classes or in those special schools established to meet their particular educational needs. You will be interested to know that even this small total represents a 30-percent increase over the total school enrollment of mentally retarded just a decade ago.

What is the core of this problem? It has a number of facets, of course, but it is the profound shortage of specialized instructors which is of the most serious import. There are approximately 8,000 teachers of the mentally retarded in the United States today. While this represents a 40-percent increase over the number of teachers available 10 years ago, we still need 5 times this number to meet the total need. In short, in a majority of this country's communities, the retarded child receives no education, no vocational training, and in some instances may not be able to take care of the most rudimentary needs of personal hygiene.

It is evident that we must meet this situation with all possible means. This present bill, H. R. 10620, would enable the Office of Education of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to establish a program which would financially assist individuals to obtain the complex training necessary for the teaching of retarded children and which would assist State institutions to either expand or initiate their mental retardation teacher programs.

Clearly, we cannot expect the total educational needs of retarded children to be met immediately. The need is great and the numbers of those who can undertake the teaching of the mentally retarded are relatively limited, for such teachers must have special enthusiasm and zeal, exceeding patience and gentleness, and exhaustive inventiveness—plus a willingness to accept remuneration that is not really commensurate with their education or their devotion. We are fortunate, however, that there are such selfless people, and that given the training opportunity they will devote themselves to a job which must have many disappointments as well as rewards. This bill will pave the way for making that opportunity possible and for at least partially realizing those goals stated in the Bill of Rights for the Handicapped Child, which was prepared more than 15 years ago by the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection. This document states that the handicaped child has a right "to a life in which his handicap casts no shadow, but which is full, day by day, with those things which make it worth while, with comradeship, love, work, play, laughter and tears—a life in which these things bring continually increasing growth, richness, relase of energies, joy in achievement."

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION—GILES COUNTY, VA.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure today of bringing to the attention of my colleagues an important and most appropriate celebration that is taking place within a few weeks in the Ninth Congressional District of Virginia, and to extend an invitation to every Member to visit and take part in this celebration.

Giles County, formed in 1806 under an act of the Virginia General Assembly, is celebrating its 150th anniversary. The week of August 26 through September 1 has been designated as the official sesquicentennial celebration week. An impressive list of events, including a historical pageant, parades, beauty contest, and a homecoming Sunday in the county's many churches, has been planned.

Giles County was named for a former Member of the House, the late Honorable William Branch Giles, who was elected to the First Congress, reelected to the Second and three succeeding Congresses, and later to the Seventh Congress. He was also a Member of the United States Senate and served as Governor of Virginia. It is appropriate, then, that we should be reminded of the 150th anniversary of Giles County, and that the director of the celebration, Raymond E. Hogan, should issue an invitation to all Members here to visit in Giles during the celebration.

Although Giles is officially 150 years old this year, the county's history dates back nearly 300 years. Historical material collected by Robert Friend, Narrows, Va., is being published in the Giles-Virginian Leader by the editor, Eaton K. Goldwaithe. The historical sketch provided me by the director, taken from Mr. Friend's collection, indicates that the advent of the first white man into the Giles area was in the year 1671. From this beginning, the history of the development of the area is traced through the formation of Augusta County and West Augusta, and eventually the formation of the county of Giles, 1806.

The history of Giles traces the development of transportation from buffalo hide boats to the modern railroads and highways that criss-cross the county today; tells of the progress of education from the earliest efforts to the complex and outstanding public-school system of today; recounts the Civil War skirmishes that occurred in the county, including the record of 2 former United States Presidents, Col. Rutherford B. Hayes, and Maj. William McKinley, being in the county seat during the period; and includes all of the interesting and fascinating events that make up the history of a rapidly growing and progressive county.

I am particularly interested in the industrial growth of Giles, because of the work that is being done today by an active area development corporation. Only this past week, a leader of this organization came to see me, advising of the work that is underway to continue the industrial development today.

Of course, the railroads of Giles—the Norfolk & Western and the Virginian—have played a great role in this industrial growth. The Norfolk & Western acquired the rights of the old New River Co. in 1881 and constructed a standard gage road. The Virginian Railway—the last class I railroad built in this country—began its construction early in the 20th century.

Industrial development began in the county in 1897 with the establishment of the New River Tannery. The Appalachian Electric Power Co. built its Glen Lyn plant in 1919, and a $26 million addition is now being constructed. The Virginian Railway's powerplant at Narrows was built around 1924–25; and in 1939 the establishment of the huge plant of the Celanese Corporation of America between Narrows and Pearisburg capped the industrial expansion.

I wish to commend the citizens of Giles County for planning this outstanding observance of their 150th anniversary as a Virginia county. It is indeed desirable that the historic founding and resulting development be commemorated during sesquicentennial week. This celebration can touch every facet of community life, giving pause for reflection on the significant events of the past 150 years and, at the same time provide reemphasis to the plans for another 150 years of progress and growth.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent Giles County in the House. And it gives me considerable pleasure to invite you and our colleagues to visit in Giles in southwest Virginia and participate in this celebration.

The local newspaper carried an editorial recently in regard to this celebration. The editor wrote:

> Giles County's history is precious, individual, and important. And in this day of changing values it is vital that the new generations have roots. We can help to accomplish this by instilling in them a pride in the county's past and a hope for the county's future; no better way can be devised than through a 150th anniversary pageant and celebration.

I must say that I agree with this writer, and that I herewith extend my best wishes for the success of the celebration and the continued growth of Giles County.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT OF 1955

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, last year, during the first session of this Congress, more than a year ago now, the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955 was passed by Congress and later signed by the President thereby becoming the law of the land. Before passing this legislation the Congress included a provision as section 7 of that law which authorizes and directs the President to take action with respect to defense-vital commodities to assure that imports of those commodities will not endanger the national security. This provision has become known as the defense amendment.

There was widespread concern within Congress with respect to many items that increasing imports of those commodities threatened the domestic economy of the industries concerned and more important in many cases the national security was involved. One of the principal commodities which was before the Congress at that time, one which is essential to our peacetime economy and vital in war, was petroleum. Many in Congress felt that increasing imports of petroleum threaten the domestic industry and thereby threaten the national security. Petroleum was, therefore, one of the principal commodities that the Congress had in mind when it adopted section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955.

The problem of excessive oil imports is one of long standing. Congress has been concerned with this matter almost continuously since World War II. This concern beginning back more than 10 years ago has been fully justified by the record. This record shows that it is unfortunate that this concern was not given more recognition at that time because the domestic industry has been weakened in its ability to meet national-defense requirements and foreign oil has taken a greater and greater share of the domestic market.

Prior to World War II oil imports amounted to less than 5 percent of domestic production. Immediately following World War II the rate of imports was increased rapidly and sharply and during the period 1946 to 1951 imports had about doubled the prewar position in the home market, amounting to about 10 percent of domestic production. As imports take over a larger and larger share of the domestic market the domestic industry is thereby forced to cut back its base of operation. That means that the domestic industry's defense base is weakened.

During the past 5 years since 1951 oil imports have continued to increase at even higher rates and there is no indication that the trend will stop unless some positive action is taken.

The concern about this problem has not been confined to Congress. In 1954 the President of the United States created the Advisory Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy, which was given the assignment of determining a proper policy to be taken by the Government with respect to oil imports. The report of that Committee was issued early in 1955. This Committee, made up of members of the Cabinet, concluded that oil imports in excess of the 1954 relationship to domestic production would endanger the national security. During 1954 imports, which had increased continuously during the postwar period, amounted to 16.6 percent of the domestic production. It was felt by many of us concerned with this problem that the Cabinet committee recommendation represented real progress toward a solution of the oil import problem. Many Members of Congress and many members of the petroleum industry felt that the 1954 relationship of 16.6 percent was too high. There was widespread support for limiting imports to 10 percent of the domestic market. I was among those who felt that 10 percent was a more realistic standard than the 1954 relationship. But there was widespread support, including my own, for establishment of the 1954 relationship for at least a trial period. It was realized that it was important to stabilize imports at some level even though there may be disagreement as to the precise level most desirable.

With this background in mind the Congress considered the extension of the Trade Agreements Act of 1955. At that time there was a strong movement to incorporate in that legislation a provision that would establish a legislative quota which would have limited oil imports to 10 percent of domestic demand. It was only after strong appeals from the executive branch of the Government that the defense amendment was adopted in lieu of the 10-percent quota. The Congress was informed that the administration, if given the authority to restrict oil imports, would take action to do so. The plea was made that such authority should be broad and general in nature so that the administration would have the greatest flexibility possible in seeking out a solution which would have the least adverse effect upon our foreign trade program and foreign policy in general. The Congress was persuaded to rely upon these pleas and reassurances, and based thereon, adopted the defense amendment.

The defense amendment gives the President ample authority to act so as to limit oil imports. It gives the President authority to take any action, in the form of increased tariffs, quotas, or any combination thereof, if such action is necessary in order to limit imports so as not to threaten to impair the national security.

The defense amendment, as applied to oil, was made clear during the congressional debate. The legislative history clearly shows that it was the intent of Congress that oil imports should be limited to the 1954 relationship. The legislative history is clear that with respect to oil imports, the Congress determined that imports in excess of the 1954 relationship would threaten to impair the national security.

Despite this clear intent of the law, no effective action has been taken under the defense amendment. Despite this clear intent of the law, imports have been permitted to continuously increase.

In 1955, imports averaged more than 18 percent of domestic production, despite the fact that the law provides that imports in excess of the 1954 relationship of 16.6 percent endangers the national security and should be curtailed.

This situation has grown even worse during 1956. For example during the first 6 months of this year imports amounted to almost 20 percent of domestic production. The future outlook offers no encouragement. In fact, according to the programs of the importing companies themselves, submitted to the Texas Railroad Commission periodically, imports during the last 6 months of this year will well exceed the ever-increasing levels of the past. These schedules of future imports indicate that during the next 6 months foreign oil will be equivalent to about 22 percent of domestic production.

This is the record of the administration's assurance to Congress if given the authority that was granted to the defense amendment. This is the record that faces those of us in Congress who have watched oil imports increase year after year, taking over a greater and greater share of the domestic market and thereby threatening to a greater and greater degree the national security of the Nation.

What action has the administration taken since Congress granted the authority embodied in the defense amendment? The initial responsibility under the defense amendment rests upon the Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, Dr. Arthur S. Flemming. Shortly after the passage of the defense amendment last year, Dr. Flemming called upon the importing companies to voluntarily reduce oil imports. In response to his request, imports, instead of being reduced, were increased. Since that time Dr. Flemming has made repeated appeals to the importing companies to curtail imports. The result each and every time has been the same, namely, increased imports of foreign oil.

The lastest appeal of Dr. Flemming was a letter of June 26, addressed to the oil importers calling for a reduction in only a portion of total imports. In fact, this appeal was limited substantially to Middle East oil into the eastern coastal area of the United States. It was a mild request. It called for a reduction in these imports, during the third quarter of this year, of 4 percent below such imports during the first 6 months of 1956. It should be borne in mind that this request did not call for any reduction in imports from Canada and Venezuela; that it did not call for any reduction in imports of residual fuel oil; that it did not call for any reduction of imports into the five Western States. Yet, what was the response to this mild request? The importing companies have just recently filed with the Texas Railroad Commission their plans covering the next few months. It shows that instead of curtailing imports for a 4 percent as requested by Dr. Flemming, that they expect to increase these imports by about 20 percent. In other words, the importing companies have ignored the pleas of Dr. Flemming for voluntary curtailment of imports.

Although during the past year, Dr. Flemming has repeatedly appealed to the importing companies to voluntarily limit imports the record shows that no results have been realized. It would appear on this record that it is now time to abandon the voluntary action route and to impose the force of law that has been authorized under the defense amendment. For some strange reason the administration appears reluctant to carry out the intent and purpose of the defense amendment.

I am hopeful that between now and the time Congress reconvenes next January that the administration will see fit to carry out the intent of Congress and exercise the authority granted under the defense amendment so as to bring oil imports within the 1954 relationship. That is the law and should be enforced. If such action is not taken between now and January, I fully expect to introduce legislation to establish definite restriction on oil imports. And I believe that, unless imports are curtailed as contemplated and intended by Congress in adopting the defense amendment, that there will be widespread support for a legislative restriction on imports.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY GEORGE M. HUMPHREY

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey has made public his determination to continue in the chairmanship of an Ohio Senator's campaign, he has elected to tarnish the high office of Secretary of the Treasury with the dual roll of chairman of a Senator's campaign committee. In my judgment, either office is a full-time job, and the highest kind of motives will not be able to erase or dispell the full-time blind partisanship which will now engage the Secretary of the Treasury.

Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey has now chosen to be an issue in the coming campaign, and his activity will focus attention on the interest of big business in the outcome.

If the Ohio Republican campaign spending proceeds in accord with current plans, the Secretary of the Treasury may well find himself spending the next several years telling congressional committees how his campaign committee raised and spent the biggest campaign chest in history.

Fiscal matters of the Nation demand the highest kind of integrity; fiscal matters of political campaigns also should. The American people will not tolerate commingling the assets of the Nation with those of the Republican Party.

GRAY REPORTS HIS RECORD IN CONGRESS

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, the gavel will fall tonight, signaling the end of the 84th Congress. I want to take this time to thank you and all of my colleagues for your great assistance and kindness to me in the 20 months I have been a Member of this great body. Without your help and the help of my colleagues, it would not have been possible for me to make this report of my achievements in Congress.

Mr. Speaker, in making my report I want to express my heartfelt thanks to the good people in southern Illinois for giving me the opportunity to stand up in the Halls of Congress and speak out in behalf of their wants and needs. It has truly been the busiest 20 months of my life, experiencing both heartaches and joys. I have tried with every ounce of energy to sell southern Illinois to the Congress and the rest of the Nation. Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have notified every Member of Congress and the national administration that southern Illinois has wonderful people, good schools, churches, and fine communities in which to live. I have made it clear that we were tired of the lack of recognition of our problems by past administrations.

In an effort to focus attention on our needs, I have appeared before every committee in Congress having under consideration legislation which I felt would benefit the people of my congressional district. I introduced a score of my own bills designed to help our people and made numerous speeches on the floor in an effort to have the legislation passed.

Mr. Speaker, during my 20 months in office, I have made over 200 speeches in southern Illinois; had several television appearances; and called a mass "sink or swim" rally at West Frankfort on December 31, 1955, to which I invited everyone, including President Eisenhower. The meeting was a huge success and has helped focus national attention on our problems. In addition, I paid for ads in southern Illinois newspapers, asking my folks to write letters to Members of Congress in support of certain pieces of legislation under consideration at the time, and sent out over 100,000 letters to organizations and individuals, asking them to write letters supporting certain legislation. With all the valuable support from you, my colleagues, and the good people back home, I was able to get through Congress in my first term a program I believe will be of great assistance to the social and economic welfare of our people in southern Illinois. I shall not attempt to list all the bills I supported, nor mention my full 20 months work in this report; however, I do take pride in listing some of my accomplishments, which were made possible through your cooperation and the cooperation of the people of my congressional district:

First. Helped pass the gigantic highway construction program: As a member of the House Committee on Public Works, helped write the Federal Highway Construction Act of 1956 and worked for its passage. The bill provides 41,000 miles of new superhighways throughout the United States and specifically a new 4-lane expressway through my congressional district in southern Illinois. This will be the largest public works program in the history of this country. In addition to a wonderful road system, it will provide many jobs for our unemployed people in southern Illinois. I was featured in the May 14 issue of Newsweek for my work on this bill.

Second. Helped liberalize social security benefits: Introduced a companion measure to H. R. 7225, and worked for its final passage. This bill liberalizes social security benefits by lowering the retirement age to 62 for women, 50 for totally disabled persons, and extends coverage to thousands of people who were heretofore not covered. I still favor lowering age to 60.

Third. Helped pass veterans' benefits bill in House: Introduced H. R. 6153, granting all World War I veterans $100 per month pension. A companion measure passed the House, allowing a pension for World War I veterans and increasing by 10 percent the amount of compensation being paid to service-connected disability veterans. Due to lack of support by the Senate, and the rush for adjournment, the House-passed measure did not reach the floor of the Senate for vote. We are hopeful it can be taken up early in January. We were successful in getting enacted into law a bill allowing increased benefits to widows of deceased veterans and other fringe benefits.

Fourth. Secured approval of $4,300,000 for Devil's Kitchen Dam project: This includes the construction of the dam, public beach, boat dock, a complete network of access roads, picnic areas, parking facilities, and the long-sought leasing of cabin sites. Obtained $2 million in cash with which to start the project with the announcement for competitive bids on September 1. This is the first action on this project in 16 years.

Fifth. Secured $50,000 for flood control survey of the Cache River and tributaries: Thousands of acres of farmland is being inundated during each rainfall. (The people residing in the Cache River Basin had been trying for years to obtain funds with which to make this study.)

Sixth. Secured $75,000 for a full-scale study of the canalization of the Big Muddy and tributaries: If a study proves feasible, this project would open up new prospects for future industrialization of southern Illinois by providing cheap transportation rates for our coal deposits and raw materials for prospective industries that might locate on the banks of the canal. I would not support a plan to hurt the railroads.

Seventh. Secured through Congress $3 million for flood control work in the 25th District for fiscal year 1956–57. (Construction work will provide many jobs.)

Eighth. Secured $25,000 for a flood-control study in the Harrisonville and Ivy Landing and Drainage District No. 2, Monroe County, Ill. (Several thousand acres of land have been inundated by water up and down the Illinois side of the Mississippi River levee due to internal drainage during floods. This survey is a test case to find out what measures are needed in order to stop large loss in crops and land damages.)

Ninth. Secured approval of Congress authorizing an expenditure of $5,970,000 for flood control improvements on the Saline River and tributaries: United States Army Corps of Engineers requested $930,000 local contribution. I was successful in having eliminated 75 percent of this amount, saving the local taxpayers $697,500.

Tenth. Secured purchase order for 100,000 tons of Illinois coal last year for overseas shipment by the Foreign Operations Administration.

Eleventh. Secured congressional approval of $1,100,000 for a Federal building at Benton, Ill: In 1937, Congress designated Benton, Ill., as a place to hold Federal court, and since that time efforts have been made to have this much needed facility built. This is the first concrete action since that date.

Twelfth. Secured a civil-defense warehouse at Ordill on Crab Orchard Lake where $4,500,000 worth of medical supplies are authorized to be stored for use in a national emergency with an authorized employee strength of 13.

Thirteenth. Helped pass the antipollution bill: As a member of the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, I worked for the passage of H. R. 9540, a bill designed to assist in clearing up our streams and rivers by aiding municipalities to build adequate sewage-disposal plants. Also worked to help secure $50 million in appropriations with which to carry out the program for the first year. Illinois cities will receive $1,734,200 for the first year with the program to run for a 10-year period.

Fourteenth. Secured passage of the fluorspar bill: Introduced H. R. 11622, a companion measure to S. 3982, which provides for the stockpiling of 250,000 tons of acid-grade fluorspar at $53 per ton. Also spurred action from the Office of Defense Mobilization to stockpile metallurgical grade fluorspar at a premium price. Helped to obtain $21 million appropriation with which to carry out the provisions of the bill. These two programs should stabilize and revitalize the entire fluorspar industry in southern Illinois, providing more jobs.

Fifteenth. Secured thousands of dollars' worth of Government surplus property for municipalities, hospitals, and schools throughout southern Illinois, including nine fire trucks.

Sixteenth. Secured tentative approval for new armory at Marion: If a suitable site can be located, an armory to house a 200-man Army Reserve training center will be built costing approximately $184,000.

Seventeenth. Supported farm program: Voted for soil-bank plan and worked for an increase in both corn and wheat acreage allotments. Since agriculture is one of the vital segments of our American economy, I have voted for all legislation I felt would be beneficial to the farmer, particularly the family-size farmer.

Eighteenth. Supported passage of bill giving flour and cornmeal to recipients of Government surplus food: Cosponsored H. R. 2851, a bill directing the Commodity Credit Corporation to grind up wheat and corn into wheat and cornmeal for distribution to needy persons receiving Government surplus food. In addition to providing food for thousands of jobless people, it is helping the farmer by getting rid of surplus wheat and corn which has been depressing the market.

Nineteenth. Voted and worked for additional funds for school-lunch program: $3,153,000 for Illinois schools was allowed for fiscal year 1957. Many southern Illinois schools had run out of school-lunch funds before the end of the school year, forcing a hardship on schoolchildren. An increase of $625,000 over last year was allowed.

Twentieth. Fought successfully against proposed sale of land at Marion Veterans' Administration Hospital by the Administration in Washington.

Twenty-first. Helped secure $250,000 appropriation with which to select a site for a new $9,500,000 Federal penitentiary: As soon as a site committee is selected, I intend to see that southern Illinois is considered, and if we meet all the necessary requirements, I am hopeful the prison can be located somewhere in my district.

Twenty-second. Conferred with President Eisenhower and every Government agency and bureau in Washington, telling them of the wants and needs of the people of southern Illinois, and soliciting assistance for various projects.

Twenty-third. Contacted over 300 individuals and concerns in an effort to locate industry in southern Illinois.

Twenty-fourth. Secured Government loans for three industries in southern Illinois.

Twenty-fifth. Requested an investigation of the accidental drownings on Crab Orchard Lake, in an effort to attempt to better safety regulations and obtain rescue equipment.

Twenty-sixth. Supported passage of a bill to aid retired railroad pension recipients.

Twenty-seventh. Worked for the passage of a bill granting postal employees an increase in salary: Was featured in National Postal magazine for 100 percent voting record for postal employees.

Twenty-eighth. Worked for passage of bill granting civil-service employees an increase in retirement benefits and liberalizing eligibility for retirement.

Twenty-ninth. Am supporting Rend Lake in Franklin County, and have urged Governor Stratton to speed up survey report by Illinois Division of Waterways in order that some proposal can be made to the Federal Government from the information derived from the survey.

Thirtieth. Secured additional appropriations for Shawnee National Forest and the forest-research center at Carbondale: Urged United States Forest Service to adopt Comte proposal, which offers a forest-development program to provide many jobs and improve our natural timber resources.

Thirty-first. Helped obtain Federal funds for hospital construction in my district.

Thirty-second. Helped secure approval of loans to various rural-electrification cooperatives in my district, amounting to several hundred thousands of dollars to extend lines to rural areas in need of electricity.

Thirty-third. Helped secure Federal loans under Federal Housing Authority in order to ease the critical housing shortage for students at the fast-growing Southern Illinois University.

Thirty-fourth. Worked for passage of bill establishing minimum wage of $1 per hour.

Thirty-fifth. Have worked diligently for legislation affecting the coal industry: Introduced legislation, made numerous speeches, and held several conferences with the administration in an effort to curb the foreign importation of residual oil which has drastically curtailed coal production and resulted in the loss of jobs in the coal mines. United Mine Workers Journal has written articles concerning my work in behalf of the coal industry.

Thirty-seventh. Helped secure approval of Federal grants for five airports in my district totaling several hundred thousand dollars.

Thirty-eighth. Supported successfully the passage of S. 3879, a bill enabling automobile dealers to bring suit in Federal district courts against manufacturers not acting in good faith in complying with terms of franchises.

Thirty-ninth. Supported successfully the passage of H. R. 8780, a bill exempting farmers from paying 2 cents per gallon Federal tax on farm used gasoline.

Fortieth. Served on three important committees—the full Public Works Committee, the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors, and the Subcommittee on Flood Control. By serving on these important committees, I was able to work for legislation not only beneficial to southern Illinois, but was able to vote for projects beneficial to citizens throughout the United States, and particularly those who have suffered loss of life and property through floods.

Forty-first. Maintained a full-time district office: For the first time in the history of southern Illinois, we have maintained a full-time, fully staffed office where the citizens may come with their problems. We have received several thousand visitors in the office during the 20 months it has been open.

Forty-second. Have received and personally answered over 75,000 letters, telegrams, telephone calls during my 20 months in office: These included all types of requests too numerous and varied to mention. I read all incoming mail and give each one my prompt and personal attention.

In addition to supporting the above measures, I have worked just as diligently in opposing certain measures. Many bills were introduced which I felt were not in the best interest of the people whom I have the honor of representing. They are too numerous to mention. I will give the foreign-aid bill as an example. There has been $60 billion given out to foreign countries since the start of the program and only $2 out of every $100 has been repaid. I do not feel that we can buy friendship, and I think this feeling is borne out by the fact that over 700 million people have come under Communist domination in the last 4 years. The money we now send to foreign countries may some day come back in bullets. I am in favor of giving hungry people our surplus food, but I am opposed to sending dollars that can very easily get into Communist hands and be used against us. I am in favor of keeping these billions at home and allowing an income tax reduction after a balanced budget.

Mr. Speaker, in closing may I again say how delighted I am to have served in this great body and express my warm personal regards and heartfelt thanks to you and my colleagues for the assistance you have rendered in my efforts to help southern Illinois. It is my hope and prayer that we can continue to progress by working together. Thank you.

THE AD HOC COMMITTEE

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to make a statement concerning the ad hoc committee appointed by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House.

This committee was established for the purpose of investigating the mistreatment and imprisonment of American citizens by the Chinese Reds.

The committee has delayed holding its hearings after consultation with high officials of the State Department.

The members of the committee recognize that sensitive negotiations are under way with respect to many American prisoners, and the committee wishes to avoid any activity which might in any sense interfere with these negotiations.

Consequently, the committee at this time has decided to postpone the opening of these hearings.

The ad hoc committee, however, will continue in its work of obtaining information on this subject, and will review the recent hearings of Senator MCCLELLAN'S Senate investigation committee to avoid any unnecessary duplication of effort.

STASSEN POLITICAL SURVEYS

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, during the past few days there has been a great deal of discussion about the intention of Mr. Stassen to conduct an opinion poll to determine public confidence in our distinguished Vice President, RICHARD NIXON.

Mr. Stassen has alleged that an Eisenhower-Herter ticket would run 6 percent stronger than an Eisenhower-Nixon ticket. This statement astonished most Republicans in the United States, and particularly astounded the Republican Members of the House. It astounded us because we are aware that polls conducted by the leading research organizations in the country, including Dr. George Gallup, Opinion Research, and sectional and regional polls of the leading newspapers in the country, all showed Vice President RICHARD NIXON as the preferred candidate for nomination by the Republican convention as the vice presidential candidate.

As recently as July 25, only 2 days ago, the Gallup poll reported Mr. NIXON as the overwhelming choice of Republican voters over six other outstanding Republicans. Mr. NIXON's lead over his nearest rival was, in fact, more than 2 to 1. As a consequence, Mr. Stassen's statement amazed the Republican Members of the House, and we were even more greatly disturbed by the total absence of any further information from Mr. Stassen regarding the source of the figures which he quoted. He has provided no information whatever regarding where, when or how his purported survey was conducted!

Now, Mr. Speaker, he tells us that he is going to conduct a new poll next week dealing with the same subject matter. Why he needs a second poll is certainly not clear, and why he needs any poll at all, in view of the many very competent and reputable polls which have already been conducted, is a very serious question in our minds. If his initial poll had any validity, it should be unnecessary for him to scour the Nation for financial support with which to finance another; he has only to reveal the circumstances under which the first was conducted.

Mr. Stassen, when pressed to reveal his associates in this new adventure, announced to the press that the new poll would be conducted under the supervision of one Adolph Toigo. I believe the American people are entitled to know something about this man who is to supervise what apparently is, in Mr. Stassen's judgment, to be such a vital sampling of American opinion. This is particularly true in view of the fact that this survey has been given so much publicity in the past few days.

Upon inquiry, I find that Mr. Toigo is not a recognized public opinion researcher but is, instead, an advertising executive and president of a New York City advertising agency, Lennen and Newell, of Madison Avenue.

I do not know who the clients of Lennen and Newell may be nor what interest they may have in such a poll. I am distressed to find, however, that Mr. Toigo, far from being an impartial, objective, neutral participant in this matter, actually is one of Mr. Stassen's long-time friends and an associate in Mr. Stassen's political endeavors. As a matter of fact, Mr. Toigo was one of the principal brain trusters behind Mr. Stassen's ambitious campaign to become President of the United States.

I find that Mr. Toigo played an active role in the Wisconsin presidential preference primary campaign in 1952. He assisted in the Stassen campaign headquarters in the city of Milwaukee as an adviser to the Wisconsin managers of that campaign.

You will recall that this was the election in which Mr. Stassen placed great reliance on public opinion surveys which were likewise very widely publicized. I recall his claim that his public opinion survey indicated he would receive the entire Wisconsin delegation of 30 delegates. Later, presumably based on a second survey, his estimate was revised to show that he would win 20 delegates to the national convention. You all know the results of the election in Wisconsin in the spring of 1952. Despite the findings of his scientific surveys he failed to win a single delegate. I think this experience should cause the American people to become most cautious about placing any reliance on any polls that Mr. Stassen has conducted recently or which he proposes to conduct in the future.

Mr. Stassen has recently advised many of the Members of the House concerning a proposed survey which he intends having conducted in the very near future. This information, of course, has led to considerable discussion and speculation. Many grave questions have been raised with respect to this highly irregular procedure. We would like to know from Mr. Toigo exactly how this survey or poll is to be conducted.

Is it going to be conducted by a professional and accredited opinion research organization? If so, we would like to know the name of the organization and something about its background and reputation. We would like to know what area this poll will cover, and how many interviews will be made. We would like to know whether the interviews will be made by the same organization that makes the tabulation and analysis of the survey. We would like to know who will make the report and draw the conclusions from the samplings made. If any weighting is done we would like to know on what basis the various weights are applied.

It would be helpful if Mr. Toigo would tell us the specific conditions under which his poll will be made. In this way it would be possible for some other organization to make a comparable poll to serve as a further contribution to what conclusions may be drawn from Mr. Toigo's survey. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, there has also been considerable speculation concerning the cost of a reliable survey of this kind on a nationwide scale.

In view of the repeated and conclusive polls which have been made by responsible public opinion research organizations, demonstrating the overwhelming preference of the American people for a continuation of Mr. NIXON's tenure as Vice President, it is inconceivable to most of us that any further polls should be necessary. Certainly, however, if any polls are to be conducted by Mr. Stassen, or Mr. Toigo, the people of the United States are entitled to have full information with respect to the methods by which they are conducted, and who conducts them, in order that they may adequately appraise their reliability. I believe they are entitled, as well, to a full and complete disclosure by Mr. Stassen with respect to the poll which he alleges has already been made.

OUR PROSPERITY IS BASED ON LAWS PASSED IN DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the Republican campaign slogan of "Peace and Prosperity" will not carry with it the weight and effectiveness that our Republican friends with their Madison Avenue high-powered public relations specialists are hoping for. Such a slogan reminds us of the old one of years ago, "The Full Dinner Pail" which has long since fallen into disuse.

In those days with the tremendous use of money—and practically all of the press controlled by the Republican Party, when radio and television did not exist, they were better able to mentally condition—a polite term for political brainwashing—the American people than today. While close to 90 percent of the newspapers of America are still Republican, due to the radio and television they are not able to wield the influence they did, not so many years ago.

And the part of the slogan "Prosperity" which the Republicans rely upon, the people know that the basis for the same was brought about by our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and by former President Harry S. Truman and the Democratic Party.

The people know that in 1953 the Republican administration inherited a sound and progressive economic system from the Democratic Party.

The economists of our country and the Republican administration have repeatedly stated that we will not have another depression "due to the cushions" that exist in the laws.

That is true.

But what are those "cushions."

First. Social-security law, which includes unemployment compensation, earned annuities, old-age assistance, aid to the blind and other groups.

Second. Protection of deposits in banks as a result of the guarantee of bank deposits, resulting in a strengthening of an economic system.

Third. Securities and Exchange Commission, protecting our people against fraud in the issuance and sale of phony stock.

Fourth. The right of labor to organize and to collectively bargain.

Fifth. The protection of homes and farms during the depression, and later, through proper and effective legislation, enabling the widespread building and owning of homes by hundreds of thousands of American families.

Sixth. The justifiable consideration given to the farmers of our country extending to them by law compensatory considerations for the tariff advantage given to business and industry.

Seventh. Legislation prior to 1953 to protect small and independent businesses.

Eighth. Minimum wage legislation and so many other bills that I could mention that have been enacted into law.

But what political party was in control of our Government when those and other beneficial laws were enacted and put upon our statute books?

As Alfred E. Smith repeatedly said, "Let us look at the record."

The undeniable record is that all of these progressive laws, now "cushions" against a future depression, were put on the statute books by the Democratic Party.

This fact is indelibly impressed on the minds of the great majority of our people.

Now that the emotionalism of the 1952 campaign is over, when the Republican Party must go to the people on its record of the last 4 years, the Democratic candidates can show that it was under the leadership of the Democratic Party that "prosperity" was given to our people.

And I might say, that during the past 4 years, with a Republican administration, that progressive legislation strengthening our economic system was enacted into law because of Democratic leadership and support.

For the great majority of the Democratic Party are sound progressives. A clear majority of the Republican Party are ultraconservative, looking backward, not forward.

On the other aspect of the slogan "Peace," that the Republicans are going to campaign on—let us again examine the record.

Today, and I say this most regretfully, our country is on the defensive throughout the world. The condition we are in is not a pleasant one to picture. Uncertainty, and even confusion, exists in our foreign policy. In Europe, in Asia, in the Middle East, in the Mediterranean we are on the defensive, due to the lack of firm leadership.

Just because shooting on a wide area is not going on does not mean we have peace.

The cold war is going on actively, and Communist Russia is waging it in a manner that should be disturbing to our people. What should disturb our people is the lack of policy, as well as uncertainty, on the part of President Eisenhower, and his administration.

Let me quote only a few illustrations.

We have seen the varying statements only recently made by President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon, and Secretary Dulles on the question of "Neutralism" on the part of some nations, we see the weakening of NATO.

We see the confused situation in the Middle East, with a forgetful policy in relation to our friend in that area, the new nation of Israel.

We witness Premier Nasser of Egypt buying arms from Communist sources, showing lack of respect and understanding for our great country.

We witness a lack of policy to contribute to the solutions of the Cyprus question, whose people and the people of Greece have been our close and valued friends.

It is only recently when the workers of Poznan, Poland, with great heroism, showed their strong desire for liberty by facing death, many of them preferring death to being denied liberty. The same thing happened in East Germany only a few years ago.

President Eisenhower and the Republicans promised the people of Poland and other Communist subjected countries liberation a little over 3 years ago.

And what have they received?

Fraternization—with the people of Poland and other satellite countries for independence, liberty, and liberation, no—but with the Communist dictators.

As we have seen the promise to unleash Chiang Kai-shek result in the opposite—to the tying of his hands—we have also seen the repudiation of the promise of "liberation" change to the opposite, "fraternization with the Kremlin," bringing to the millions behind the Iron Curtain who hate communism, and who believed in the promise of "liberation" disappointment and disillusionment. One of the greatest assets we have is likely to be lost as a result of such confused leadership.

And as a further illustration, it is only a short time ago, when the uprising at Poznan was taking place, when we read our newspapers stating in one column the number of workers killed at Poznan, and in the next column a news story about President Eisenhower urging extensive fraternization with Communist Russia.

What poor timing.

What a message to send to those in Poznan who participated in the uprising, and to the countless millions in Poland and in other satellite countries who hate their Communist oppressors.

Under former President Truman we had firmness in our foreign policy.

Everyone whether behind or outside of the Iron Curtain knew he made his own decisions and he meant what he said. There was firmness in our foreign policy under President Truman, and under the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. We did not have a day-to-day or week-to-week foreign policy.

The Communist leaders not only respected, but they feared him. We had firmness and strength in our foreign policy. Our country was respected throughout the world. They knew Truman's policy of "Peace Through Strength" meant what it said.

Under former President Truman we were not on the defensive throughout the entire world. Our allies and other friendly nations did not doubt our sincerity.

The quicker we get back to the policy of "Peace Through Strength" the better it will be for our country.

The way to get back to that is through Democratic leadership again in control of our Government and of our foreign policy.

So as we approach the coming campaign, with the Republicans intending to try and mentally condition, sloganize our people with the slogan of "Peace and Prosperity," we Democrats can effectively meet and destroy such a campaign by showing on the established record that it was through the Democratic Party that prosperity was brought to our people. And that it is through the Democratic Party that the best assurances of real peace can be brought to our people and to a troubled world.

"SEC. 206. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to recognize the primary responsibilities of the States and local interests in developing water supplies for domestic, municipal, industrial, and other purposes and that the Federal Government should participate and cooperate with States and local interests in developing such water supplies in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of Federal navigation, flood control, or multiple purpose projects.

"(b) In carrying out this policy and that set forth in section 205 above, it is hereby provided that storage may also be included in any reservoir project surveyed, planned, constructed or to be planned, surveyed and/or constructed by the Corps of Engineers to impound water for present or anticipated future demand or need for municipal or industrial water and the reasonable value thereof may be taken into account in estimating the economic value of the entire project: Provided, That when contract for the use of such impounded waters is made it shall be on the basis that will provide equitable reimbursement to the United States as determined by the Secretary of the Army: Provided further, That the entire amount of the construction costs, including interest during construction, allocated to water supply shall be repaid within the economic life of the project, but in no event to exceed fifty years after the project is first available for the storage of water for any purpose. The interest rate used for purposes of computing interest during construction and interest on the unpaid balance shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, as of the beginning of the fiscal year in which construction is initiated, on the basis of the computed average interest rate payable by the Treasury upon its outstanding marketable public obligations, which are neither due nor callable for redemption for fifteen years from date of issue."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On page 21, line 22, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "including public recreational use,".

On page 22, line 15, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "Act" and insert "section".

And the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12080) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The following Senate amendments made technical, clerical, clarifying, or conforming changes in the House bill: 1, 10, 11, 12, 14, 23, 26, 30, 31, 36, 46, 56, 57, and 58.

The House recedes with respect to each of these amendments.

Amendment No. 2: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut, at an estimated cost of $2,300,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the improvement of the Barataria Bay Waterway, Louisiana, at an estimated cost of $1,700,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the modification of the existing project in the Mississippi River at St. Anthony Falls, Minneapolis, Minn., at an estimated cost of $19,893,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: The House bill provided for the adoption of the project for the Minnesota River, Minnesota, at an estimated cost of $2,539,000. The Senate amendment modifies the project included in the House bill by providing for the extension of the channel .5 mile upstream at an estimated additional cost of $5,000. The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Amendment No. 6: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the improvement of Port Washington Harbor, Wisconsin, at an estimated Federal cost of $2,936,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 7: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the improvement of the Yaquina Bay and Harbor, Oregon, at an estimated cost of $19,800,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 8: The Senate amendment provided for the adoption of the project for the improvement of the Waimea Beach and Hanapepe Bay, Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, at an estimated cost of $20,000. The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Amendment No. 9: The Senate amendment provides for the modification of the project for the improvement of the Pascagoula Harbor, Dog River Cutoff, Mississippi, to permit local interests to be reimbursed for work which they have done on the project, within the limits of the Federal portion of the project, over and above that required as a part of the local cooperation for the project. The amendment provides that such reimbursement will be made only if such work has been approved by the Chief of Engineers and found to have been done in accordance with the project modification provided in the amendment. The amendment provides that the payment (1) cannot exceed $44,000, (2) will be subject to appropriations thereto, and will not have priority over authorized Federal improvements of higher priority, and (3) cannot be made until the local interests have met all the requirements of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 188, 81st Congress. The House recedes with technical amendments.

Amendment No. 13: The Senate amendment provides that the Chief of Engineers may enter into contracts for the protection, alteration, reconstruction, relocation, or replacement of structures or facilities owned by an agency of government where such structures or facilities are adversely affected or threatened by a navigation, flood control, or related water development project. Payments under such contracts could be made from appropriations made for the construction or maintenance of the project. The contracts can provide for the payment of the reasonable actual cost of the work, or for the payment of a lump sum representing the estimated reasonable cost. However, the new provision will not modify any existing or future requirement of local cooperation, and it does not indicate a policy that local interests shall not hereafter be required to assume costs of modifying such facilities. The new provision will apply to projects hereafter authorized and to those which have heretofore been authorized but have not been completed on the date of this Act. It will apply to structures and facilities occupying the beds of navigable waters. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22: These Senate amendments added certain localities to those to be surveyed, subject to section 110 of the River and Harbor Act of 1950. The localities are as follows:

Short Sands Section of York Beach, York County, Maine.

Sachem's Head Harbor, Guilford, Conn.

Indian River Bay to Assawoman Canal known as White's Creek, and up White's Creek, Del.

Indian River Bay via Pepper's Creek to Dagsboro, Del.

Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia (water chestnut elimination).

Savannah River, with a view to providing nine-foot navigation to Augusta, Ga.

Camp Pendleton Harbor and Oceanside, Calif. (beach erosion).

Anaheim Bay, Calif. (beach erosion).

With respect to these amendments, the House recedes, or recedes with technical amendments.

Amendment No. 24: This amendment would increase the appropriation authorization for the Connecticut River Basin by $6,000,000, in order to cover the cost of the project which would be added to the House bill by the Senate amendment No. 25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 25: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for the Mad River Dam and Reservoir on the Mad River above Winsted, Conn., in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost of $5,820,000. The authorization for the Connecticut River Basin would be increased under amendment No. 24 by $6,000,000, to cover the cost of this project. The House recedes with technical amendments.

Amendment No. 27: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for the flood-control dam and reservoir on Hall Meadow Brook in Torrington, and Goshen, Conn., in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost of $2,420,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 28: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for the flood-control dam and reservoir on the east branch of the Naugatuck River in Torrington, Conn., in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost of $2,670,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 29: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on the north branch of the Susquehanna River, New York and Pennsylvania, and authorizes the appropriation of $30,000,000 for partial accomplishment of such project substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 394, 84th Congress. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 32: This amendment would increase by $512,000 the appropriation authorized for the project for flood control and related purposes on the Tombigbee River and tributaries, Mississippi and Alabama, substantially in accordance with recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report published as House Document No. 167, 84th Congress. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 33: This amendment would reduce by $512,000 the contribution which local interests may contribute in cash or equivalent work in lieu of the cash contribution contained in item (f) of the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report published as House Document No. 167, 84th Congress. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 34: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on the Alabama River at Montgomery, Ala., substantially in accordance with the report of the division engineer, dated June 11, 1956, at an estimated cost of $1,300,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 35: The Senate amendment provided that the general plan for flood control on Red River, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana, below Denison Dam, Texas and Oklahoma, is modified and expanded (at an estimated additional cost of $53,235,000) as recommended in the Chief of Engineers' report on Millwood Reservoir and alternate reservoirs, Little River, Oklahoma and Arkansas, with the following exceptions:

(1) The Sherwood Reservoir on Mountain Fork River is authorized in addition to the reservoir recommended in such report.

(2) The basis for determining the cost allocated to hydroelectric power and water supply purposes in the case of the Sherwood Reservoir and the six other reservoirs upstream from Millwood Reservoir (recommended by the Chief of Engineers in such report) shall be the incremental method of allocation. Under the incremental method of allocation, the cost allocated to power and water supply is limited to the cost of adding power and water as purposes in the project. Under the amendment flood control and land-enhancement benefits are not reimbursable.

(3) The seven reservoirs in question would be constructed either prior to or concurrently with the Millwood Reservoir.

The amendment also provided that the States of Arkansas and Oklahoma will have priority of use, consistent with the laws of such States, or any water supplies originating within their respective boundaries and developed, conserved, or improved by any project now or hereafter authorized as part of the general plan for flood control on the Red River.

The substitute agreed upon in conference is the same as the Senate amendment, except that the provision that the reservoirs could be constructed either prior to or concurrently with the Millwood Reservoir is amended to require that they be constructed concurrently with such reservoir, and the incremental method of cost allocation for water supply and power is made applicable to Millwood Reservoir as well as to the seven upstream reservoirs.

Amendment No. 37: This amendment would permit provision of additional flood-control storage or changing pool elevations in connection with the Markham Ferry Reservoir, on Grand River in Oklahoma, authorized to be constructed by the Grand River Dam Authority by Public Law 476, 83d Congress (68 Stat. 450). Any change in pool elevations would require approval of the Chief of Engineers. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 38: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for the Saylorville Reservoir on the Des Moines River, Iowa, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated April 6, 1956, at an estimated cost of $44,500,000. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

Amendment No. 39: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on the Grand River, Michigan, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers contained in Senate Document No. 132, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $9,825,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 40: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on Owasco Outlet, tributary of the Oswego River, at Auburn, N. Y., substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers contained in Senate Document No. 133, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $305,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 41: This amendment of the Senate contains a number of separate matters.

First, it provides that with respect to any power attributable to any dam in the comprehensive plan for the Missouri River Basin, to be constructed by the Chief of Engineers, the construction of which has not been started, an equitable proportion of such power, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, or such portions thereof as may be required from time to time to meet loads under contract made within this reservation, shall be made available for use in the State where such dam is constructed.

Second, it provides for the modification of general comprehensive plans for flood control and other purposes in the Missouri River Basin, heretofore adopted, to include the payment to Williston, North Dakota, from funds appropriated for the Garrison Reservoir project, the sum of $1,200,000, to compensate for the replacement of that city's water supply and water treatment facilities.

Third, it amends Public Law 641, 84th Congress, to provide the following:

(1) In lieu of protecting the Lewis and Clark Irrigation District, $1,935,000 of the funds appropriated for the Garrison Dam and Reservoir will be available for the purchase of lands and improvements in such district, and $1,196,000 shall be available for the relocation of highways and utilities in such district.

(2) The substitution of land acquisition for the protection will be made if all the landowners (except the State or its political subdivisions or agencies) have, by the end of June 1957, offered to sell their property on terms agreeable to the landowners and within the amount provided for the land acquisition.

(3) The Secretary of the Army can acquire lands of the State of North Dakota or its political subdivisions and agencies pursuant to the provisions of this or any other Act, except that no limitation of time shall apply within which such property must be offered for sale if it is to be acquired pursuant to this Act.

(4) If all the landowners other than the State and its political subdivisions and agencies have, by the end of June 1957, offered to sell their property as described above, and the Secretary of the Army determines that the acquisition of the land of the State and its political subdivisions and agencies is necessary, he is authorized to condemn it.

Fourth, it provides that the Secretary of the Army may construct and provide—

(1) facilities to treat the sewage of the St. Joseph's Indian School (or to connect with the city system) at a cost of not to exceed $35,000.

(2) sewer facilities for Fort Pierre, S. Dak., at a cost of not to exceed $120,000, and water facilities at not to exceed $25,000.

(3) sewer facilities for Pierre, S. Dak., at a cost of not to exceed $210,000. The amendment also authorizes the Chief of Engineers to pay the Ridgeview School District, Ridgeview, S. Dak., the sum of $10,000 as reimbursement for a certain school building. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Army may provide the sums necessary to carry out these provisions out of sums appropriated for the construction of the Oahe Dam and Reservoir project, Missouri River.

Lastly, the amendment authorizes the project for the enlargement and improvement of the existing dam and reservoir on Elm River, a tributary of the James River, South Dakota, at an estimated cost of $1,750,000.

The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

Amendment No. 42: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection in the Gering and Mitchell Valleys, Nebraska, substantially as recommended by the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document No. 136, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $1,214,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 43: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on Ruffy Brook and Lost River, Minnesota, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers contained in Senate Document No. 141, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $632,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 44: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for the upper Wabash River and tributaries, Indiana, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 435, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $45,500,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 45: This amendment would add to the House bill the project for flood protection on Meadow River at East Rainelle, W. Va., substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers contained in Senate Document No. 137, 84th Congress, at an estimated cost of $708,000. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 47: The Senate amendment authorizes the project for Bruces Eddy Dam and Reservoir on the north fork of the Clearwater River, Idaho (in the Columbia River Basin), for flood control, navigation, and other purposes substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers as set forth in Senate Document No. 51, of the 84th Congress. In addition the Senate amendment authorizes the appropriation of $25,000,000 for the partial accomplishment of this project and increases the appropriation authorized for the Columbia River Basin accordingly. The Senate amendment further provides that there shall be made available for use in the State of Idaho such power attributable to this project as the Secretary of the Interior determines to be an equitable proportion of firm power, or such portion thereof as may be required from time to time to meet loads under contracts made pursuant to this reservation. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 48: The Senate amendment would add a new section 206 to the House bill providing that all Federal navigation, flood-control, and multiple-purpose projects may include provisions for development of water supplies for domestic, municipal, industrial, and other purposes, if State and local interests agree to pay the costs allocated to the development of water supplies for such purposes. This amendment also includes provisions to permit modifications of such projects for future water supply when directed by resolution adopted by the Public Works Committee of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or when approved by the Secretary of the Army upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, if the cost of such provisions for future water supply does not exceed 30 percent of the total estimated cost of the project to be modified for such purpose. This amendment further provides that State or local interests shall be responsible for complying with any applicable State law relating to water supply or water use.

The House recedes with an amendment. Under the conference agreement, the declaration of policy contained in subsection (a) of section 206 of the bill (as amended by the Senate amendment) is retained. In lieu of the remainder of section 206 (as contained in the Senate amendment) a new subsection (b) is added, which provides that storage capacity may be included in any reservoir project now constructed, now being constructed, planned, or surveyed or to be planned, surveyed or constructed in the future, to provide water for present or anticipated future municipal or industrial demands or needs. The reasonable value of such storage capacity may be taken into account in determining the economic value of the entire project of which such storage capacity is a part. Provisions for low-flow augmentation contained in section 205 of the bill are also within the scope of section 206 (b).

The use of storage provided for domestic, municipal, or industrial water supply pursuant to the authority granted by the proposed subsection (b) may be contracted for on a basis that will provide equitable reimbursement to the United States, as determined by the Secretary of the Army, and the amount or amounts of such reimbursement shall be fixed so as to pay for the portion of construction costs allocated to water supply over a 50-year period, beginning with the time when the project is first available for the storage of water for any purpose, with interest computed on the basis of the long-term interest rate on Federal obligations.

Amendment No. 49: The Senate amendment provides that for 3 years from the date of enactment of the bill the Secretary of the Army may reconvey lands or interests in land heretofore acquired for the Grapevine and Garza-Little-Elm Reservoir projects in Texas to the former owners thereof whenever (1) he determines that such land is not required for public purposes, including public recreational use, and (2) he shall receive an application for reconveyance of such land or interests from a former owner of such land within 90 days after he has given notice to such former owner. Such reconveyances are to conform the acquisition of lands or interests in land heretofore acquired for the projects to the lesser estate in lands now being acquired to complete the real-estate requirements of the projects. However, no lands heretofore acquired for the Grapevine Reservoir project lying below elevation of 557 feet are to be reconveyed under the Senate amendment or revested under the act of October 21, 1942 (56 Stat. 797), prior to January 1, 1958.

The Secretary of the Army may make such exceptions, restrictions, and reservations in the land reconveyed under the Senate amendment as he determines to be in the public interest, but no mineral rights may be reserved, unless he finds that they are needed for the efficient operation of the reservoir projects designated in the bill.

Any land reconveyed under the Senate amendment shall be sold for an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to the amount paid for such land by the United States adjusted to reflect (1) any increase in the value thereof resulting from improvements made thereon by the United States, but not any enhancement in value resulting from the construction of the Grapevine and Garza-Little-Elm Reservoir projects, or (2) any decrease in the value thereof resulting from (A) any reservation, exception, restrictions, and condition to which such reconveyance is made subject, and (B) any damage to the land caused by the United States. Under the Senate amendment, the grantee shall bear the cost of any survey or boundary markings necessary as an incident of such reconveyance.

The proceeds from reconveyances under the Senate amendment are to be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The House recedes with an amendment which strikes out the words "including public recreational use," after the words "public purposes", so that the meaning of the term "public purposes" will not be modified or restricted.

Amendment No. 50: This amendment is a clerical amendment. The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Amendment No. 51: The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to cause surveys for flood control and allied purposes, including channel and major drainage improvements, and floods aggravated by or due to wind or tidal effects, to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers with respect to Stump Creek, tributary of North Fork of Mahoning Creek, at Skyesville, Pa. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 52: The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to cause surveys as to flood control and major drainage problems to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers with respect to watersheds of the Illinois River, at and in the vicinity of Chicago, Ill., the Chicago River, Ill., the Calumet River, Ill. and Ind., and their tributaries, and any areas in northeast Illinois and northwest Indiana which drain directly into Lake Michigan. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 53: The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to cause surveys for flood control and allied purposes, including channel and major drainage improvements, and floods aggravated by or due to wind or tidal effects, to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers with respect to Soquel Creek, Calif. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 54: The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to cause surveys for flood control and allied purposes, including channel and major drainage improvements, and floods aggravated by or due to wind or tidal effects, to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers with respect to streams at and in the vicinity of San Mateo, Calif. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 55: The Senate amendment provides that Kihei District, Island of Maui, T. H., is to be an area where the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to cause surveys for flood control and allied purposes, including channel and major drainage improvements, and floods aggravated by or due to wind or tidal effects, to be made under the direction of the Chief of Engineers. The House recedes.

PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, we have been having a lot of trouble about the suggested dams on the upper Susquehanna River, and they have been uniformly of a very low benefit-to-cost ratio. The way they work out on 5 dams that are already authorized is that they have a benefit-to-cost ratio of .27 to 1; that is, they could not possibly produce more benefit than 25 percent of what the cost would be.

Now we have had two different ones chucked at us in attempts on appropriations this spring, and now we have another one for a dam on the north branch of the Susquehanna River referred to in House Document 394 and which appears as amendment No. 29 on page 23 of the bill in the Senate. Now, that proposition is just so good that the document is not yet printed and available. So, you cannot tell what it is or where it is or anything about it.

Now, I am sorry that our conferees yielded to the Senate on this proposition. I know it is absolutely worthless and it is a dangerous thing to get into building dams where the benefit-to-cost ratio runs so poor.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. I am sure the gentleman has served as a conferee more often than the Member from Ohio, and I am certain he recognizes what we were up against in this conference. In addition to what the distinguished gentleman from New York so ably said, may I quote from one section of the conference report:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to recognize the primary responsibilities of the State and local interests in developing water supplies for domestic, municipal, industrial, and other purposes, and that the Federal Government should participate and cooperate with the State and local interests in developing such water supplies in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of Federal navigation, flood control, multiple-purpose projects.

In addition to the very project that the gentleman from New York has so ably called to our attention, this legislation enters into a new program where we certainly are infringing upon States rights. We have not recognized the old philosophy that we should have a recommendation from the Corps of Engineers of the Army, as well as from the Bureau of the Budget. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is to be congratulated for calling our attention to the statement relative to the Susquehanna River.

Mr. TABER. As I understand it, about two-thirds of this bill has not been approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and a great deal of it has not been approved by the Army engineers—about 50 percent of it, anyway.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. I think we should say as to a written report, as set out in the rules and regulations or the law, they have not furnished us a written report.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that we ought not to approve any conference report which goes along in this way. It is too much of a good thing. It is loading up the country terribly.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Is it not a fact that the House voted overwhelmingly against these projects when they were brought in in proper order heretofore?

Now this thing comes back to us so disguised that it is impossible to make out what is in the bill. A document is referred to of which we cannot even obtain a copy. There is no recommendation from the Army engineers. We are simply asked to swallow the whole thing. I have my own suspicions and I think the gentleman has his, too, as to why this was placed here by the Senate. Certainly it never had the approval of this House, and in my humble opinion should never have that approval.

I thank the gentleman for his very fine dissertation on this whole matter with which he is so eminently familiar.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PHILLIPS. As the gentleman from New York knows, I am one of the members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations on Public Works. Twice this year, as I recall, we had before us a recommended project which seemed to be for this purpose. We twice rejected it because of the low-benefit ratio and high cost. Is this related to the same project which we have twice rejected?

Mr. TABER. It is in the same territory, but you cannot even tell in what State it is or exactly what it is.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the gentleman is in error in stating that the Bureau of the Budget has not approved this item, nor the Army engineers.

Mr. TABER. I do not know about its being approved by the Bureau of the Budget; I could not tell you about that.

Mr. DONDERO. Or that the Army engineers have not approved it. There may not be a written report on file, but it is my understanding from the Senate conferees that they both have approved this project. It is in southern New York and northeastern Pennsylvania and is described in full in the report on this bill.

Mr. TABER. Where?

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. While the gentleman from New York is checking this particular item I want to call to the attention of the membership page 14067 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which the Member from Ohio had something to say on this matter.

In this the Member from Ohio stated there was $572,505,500 worth of projects that had not been approved by a written order of the Army engineers nor the Bureau of the Budget. This always has been adhered to. Since that time, Mr. Speaker, the other body has recommended an increase of $271,651,000 on flood control and $46,649,700 worth of navigation projects.

Mr. TABER. There is a funny thing about that. The authorized cost is $30 million. On page 22 of the report of the Senate the project report of 1954 showed reservoirs $82 million; current, January 1956, reservoirs, $90 million. This way of doing business, of having a bill based upon a report of the Army engineers which you cannot find and cannot reach and cannot tell anything about, goes way beyond me. I cannot go along with it.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. On page 39 of the bill there is a very good example of what the gentleman is speaking about, the complete lack of justification for a specific project. This is an item for so-called flood protection on the west branch of the Mahoning River in Ohio. It is said in the bill to be authorized substantially in accordance with plans to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost of $14 million.

First, this project has never been approved by the Bureau of the Budget; second, there has never been adequate engineering research or investigation on it nor a report by the Army engineers which specifically violates the present statutory law now in force. Third, it is in an area where the engineers themselves admit it will take a flood greater than a 600-year recurrence, and almost a Noah's flood, once every 3,000 years, to cause substantial flood damage. If that is a flood-control proposal, I would like to know it. Here is a project that has been pushed in to this bill suddenly and without any investigation whatever.

It admits on the face of the bill this project is only to be approved according to plans to be prepared substantially in accordance with what the Chief of Engineers says. The opposition was not given an opportunity to be heard by the subcommittee of the Public Works Committee of the House which had jurisdiction, although specific request for opportunity to be heard was made by the objectors. This should be recalled when any request is made to this House for appropriation of funds under this questionable and rushed authorization legislation on this west Mahoning Branch, Ohio, so-called flood project.

Mr. TABER. I appreciate what the gentleman has said.

Last night we had an appropriation bill come back because of one item. If you throw back this item it could be fixed up in 20 minutes and we could get the thing straightened out and get rid of things that ought not to be in here.

I hope the House when they come to vote on this conference report will vote it down and send it back.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ALGER].

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, something has occurred in this legislation which I humbly submit is not in accordance with proper procedure. Certainly it may be legal, but I have a feeling that what I have to tell you may make you think further on this conference report. This item is on page 50, amendment No. 49.

I have in my hand the Consent Calendar, in which is listed No. 808, in which I am concerned. It refers to the lake from which Dallas draws its drinking water, and in which we have a substantial financial investment. While it is not in my district, naturally we are greatly concerned with it under the State water laws of Texas.

I have here also the bill and the report that was to come before this body but for some reason did not. I want to tell you this. I have several amendments to amend this bill. I was asked by my colleagues not to do this in the subcommittee, but rather to carry it over to the full committee. In the full committee, a matter of several days ago, I was asked by my Texas colleagues, who have a vital interest in this, "Do not propose the amendments here, Bruce, but carry it over to the floor." This I necessarily had to do, though protesting that it should be done in committee. I have waited patiently—11 hours here yesterday for this bill either on Consent Calendar or under suspension of rules waiting to be heard. I waited all day today. What do you think I learned about midmorning? By rather slick legislative procedure, this land revestment bill has been placed in the Senate version of the omnibus public works, rivers and harbors, flood control work. H. R. 12093, revesting the land, has not come before this body at all for you to hear anything about the facts. I have one or two things to say about that. There are a few facts I would like to bring to your attention although I think you can see already that the facts will make no difference. There have been no public hearings on this measure. I do want to call your attention to several things that are of interest to me and possibly you will think further and ask that section 49 be stricken from the bill.

I am interested in the provision that says the land that this bill requests to be returned to the former owners not be returned until we know whether it will be necessary to have to buy the land right back again. Further than that, I am interested solely in the maximum utilization of the yield of the watershed of the Trinity River which drains into this lake from which we of Dallas get our water. Dallas engineers had a plan to submit to this body through a committee at the proper time concerning how to get an additional yield of 35 million gallons per day from the Grapewine and Garza-Little Elm Lakes. But, we were a little ahead of ourselves so I simply brought in an amendment to the Wright and Ikard bills. Of course, on the revestment of land, according to the policy of the Corps of Engineers, Dallas invested $3,700,000 under the plan of the Corps of Engineers to buy land to the spillway crests level plus 10 feet. Subsequently the Corps of Engineers changed that policy to acquiring land to the conservation pool level plus a 5-year flood frequency, which was substantially lower. This was done without consulting with the city of Dallas which had entered into this contract under other terms.

Immediately after that, my colleagues from Texas introduced bills to revest this land to the former owners—the same land in which we have a financial investment which possibly may be needed, if, as I said, the Texas Water Board agrees to raise the level of the Garza-Little Elm Lake.

Now an appeal was made to me by the city of Dallas who said this bill is forcing the revestment of land which we may have to buy back. Of course, I said I would look into the facts. I have looked into it and know you should have the facts placed before you in a more sensible way than this last-minute haste. The chairman of this subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], did all he could to give me a fair chance but there were no public hearings.

Now, I suspect questionable political moves lie behind this bill. I also know the wishes of the constituents of my colleague's district who want their land back for grazing. I am all for land revestment generally, but not the land that may have to be bought back. I submit to you there should have been public hearings. This will only take a short period of time.

Surely, it is our right to have hearings so that we can find out the merit of revestment of the land right at the water's edge at the lakes in question. The water in Garza-Little Elm is far below the spillway and can be raised to get more water for several communities, including my colleague's district.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALGER. I yield.

Mr. WRIGHT. Insofar as the gentleman has alluded to the suggestion which some of us made in committee when this separate bill was being considered by the committee that he might offer certain amendments when the matter came on the floor of the House, I should like to say that I was among those who did suggest that course of action and that I did it in good faith believing that we would have an opportunity, and that I told the gentleman I would offer certain amendments when it came upon the floor, but that I had no way of knowing, in so suggesting, that it was going to come before the body in this manner and that is the reason that the suggestion was made.

Mr. ALGER. I thank my colleague. Of course, I would remind him that I joined him as I joined another Congressman from Texas in seeking the revestment of land around other lakes. I was only interested in Garza-Little Elm Lake because Dallas has such a large financial investment and it is the source of our water. I ask you to consider striking out section 49 from this bill. Send it back and have it stricken and bring a bill back that we can vote for and protect the people of Dallas, whose interest is concerned.

To supplement these remarks, I want to add the observations of Forrest and Cotton, our able Dallas engineers, addressed to Mr. Vollmer and the Dallas Water Survey Committee, a fine group of dedicated citizens.

Early in our engineering investigations, it was apparent that the present conservation storage capacity in the Lewisville and Grapevine Reservoirs was not sufficient to fully develop the water resources of the Elm Fork and Denton Creek, and it would be necessary for the city of Dallas to provide additional conservation space on these streams. Engineering studies developed that suitable reservoir sites existed on the Elm Fork above Lewisville Reservoir and on Denton Creek above Grapevine Reservoir. These sites, known as the Aubrey and Roanoke sites, respectively, are shown on the small map attached hereto.

The engineering studies on Elm Fork and Denton Creek, show that water conservation would be greatly benefited by an exchange of storage between the existing and proposed new projects. In the case of the Lewisville and Aubrey Reservoirs, the exchange would provide for an additional 218,000 acre-feet of the present flood-control storage in Lewisville to be used for water conservation, and an equivalent amount of flood storage, approximately 238,000 acre-feet, would be provided in the Aubrey Reservoir. Such an exchange, resulting in a better distribution in the conservation storage, would increase the total yield of the two projects by 26 million gallons per day. In the case of the Grapevine and proposed Roanoke projects, the conservation storage in Grapevine would be increased by 200,000 acre-feet, which would be replaced by a like amount of flood control storage in the Roanoke Reservoir. No conservation storage space would be provided in the Roanoke Reservoir. This arrangement, drastically reducing evaporation losses, would increase the yield of the two projects by 9 million gallons per day. Thus, the exchange of storage between the existing and proposed projects would make an additional 35 million gallons of water per day available for municipal supply and would not, in any way, detract from the flood control value of the projects. In fact, the new projects as proposed would materially increase the flood protection of Dallas and the Trinity River Valley. It is desired to emphasize that the city of Dallas would propose nothing that would decrease the flood protection provided by the present reservoirs and would strongly oppose any plan that would decrease the flood protection now enjoyed. In order to make the exchange of storage, it would be necessary in the future to raise the elevation of the Lewisville Reservoir 7 feet, and the Grapevine Reservoir 22 feet.

When construction was initiated on these two projects by the Corps of Engineers, the policy of the Government was to acquire the reservoir lands in fee simple to the maximum probable reservoir elevation, which would be some 10 feet above the spillway crests. It was on this basis that the city of Dallas agreed to participate in the cost of these projects, for which the city would receive conservation storage space. About 2 years ago, the Corps of Engineers changed its policy without consulting with the city of Dallas. Under the new policy, the Corps of Engineers started acquiring land in fee only to the conservation pool level, plus a height equal to a flood of 5-year frequency. In effect, the land was acquired in fee only a few feet above the conservation pool level. In addition to this change in acquisition policy, the Congressmen from Fort Worth and Denton have introduced bills reinvesting fee title in former owners of lands above this new "take line" which had been acquired prior to the change in policy. The effect of the new policy and the proposed legislation would be to reinvest fee title to a band of land around each reservoir that would later be needed in connection with the exchange of storage between these reservoirs and the proposed new reservoirs at Aubrey and Roanoke. This would involve 3,584 acres in the Lewisville Reservoir and 4,044 acres in the Grapevine Reservoir.

As soon as it was apparent that this new policy of land acquisition would handicap future development on the Elm Fork the city manager of the city of Dallas contacted the Corps of Engineers office in Fort Worth requesting that the land acquisition program take into consideration the future development program and advised that any additional cost resulting would be borne by the city of Dallas. These negotiations were carried on by representatives of the city for about a year without results. Appeal was then made for assistance to Congressman ALGER. After considerable negotiation, Congressman ALGER about 2 months ago secured a commitment from the Chief of Engineers whereby the small amount of remaining land would be purchased to the height desired by the city of Dallas. Congressman ALGER attempted to insert a section in the authorization bill for public works authorizing the proposed exchange of storage between the existing and future reservoirs. His proposal was defeated by opposition of Congressman FRANK IKARD, of Denton, and Congressman JIM WRIGHT, of Fort Worth. At the present time Congressman ALGER is fighting bills by these two Congressmen which would return these lands to the former owners. It is possible that Congressmen FRANK IKARD and JIM WRIGHT may not fully understand the significance of this proposed plan. If they are made aware of the fact that the plan will increase the yield of these reservoirs by 35 million gallons of water per day over what would otherwise prevail, and if they become aware of what might constitute a breach of faith between the Government and the city of Dallas, it is believed that their attitudes might change.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. METCALF].

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the very worthwhile provisions of this bill except that I merely regret that the Conference Committee has chosen to include Bruces Eddy project. I have as many good reasons for having the Bruces Eddy project struck out as some other Members have for their pet projects. When you read my reasons in the morning you will find that they are not enough to defeat the whole bill.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House refused to vote for a rule to consider the Fryingpan-Arkansas project, a reclamation project that had been voted out of the House committee after lengthy hearings. The Fryingpan-Arkansas project was a transmountain diversion to provide supplemental water and would cost about $150 million.

Today we are asked to vote for a project that has never been able to clear a legislative committee of the House, that is to cost almost as much, more than $120 million, and one whose almost 600-foot dam will flood 48 miles of the canyon of the North Fork of the Clearwater River. Yet we have but a few minutes of debate and this Bruces Eddy project is going to go sailing through without adequate consideration and against the opposition of many Members of this House who have previously voted for all such projects.

In recent testimony before the Rules Committee the question was asked, "Where is the giveaway at Hells Canyon?" One of the giveaways at Hells Canyon is the loss of almost 3 million acre-feet of storage. And right here is an attempt to get some of that storage back.

Bruces Eddy Dam is to be 570 feet high, creating a reservoir of 1,433,000 acre-feet of usable storage which will replace about half of the storage lost by the giveaway at Hells Canyon. Instead of utilizing the rugged canyon that forms a huge natural reservoir at Hells Canyon, we are going to inundate one of the last upland wildernesses in America and destroy a unique scenic and recreational area and lose important fish and wildlife resources.

The report on the project doesn't say anything about a partnership at Bruces Eddy. But everyone in America who has followed the development of the power resources in this region knows that the five northwestern power companies who have combined as the Pacific Northwest Power Co. have designs on Bruces Eddy and Penny Cliffs. In January of this year the northwest power combine succeeded in renewing its preliminary FPC permit for investigation and study of the Bruces Eddy project.

It is significant that the very individuals who have succeeded in tailoring down the Hells Canyon project so that the Idaho Power Co. could build it are the ones who are most enthusiastic about Bruces Eddy. And after the defeat of a Federal Hells Canyon Dam in the other body, up comes the Bruces Eddy project.

In the final decision of the Federal Power Commission the opinion touched upon this question of loss of storage on the Snake and Columbia Rivers by the licensing of the Idaho Power Co. dams. The Commission said:

> If applicant [Idaho Power Co.] is to be permitted to construct its developments, an additional amount of flood control would have to be provided elsewhere. We have previously pointed out some possibilities of providing this storage, although its relative cost is not shown. However, we are convinced from the record that the provision of such storage should not be a problem from the standpoint of availability of other sites.

The other possibilities mentioned by the Commission for upstream storage were 4,250,000 acre-feet at Libby which is currently stymied in the International Joint Commission, and Glacier View's 3,160,000 acre-feet which could be obtained by invading Glacier Park for a storage reservoir.

So the authorization of Bruces Eddy is carrying out the present pattern of inadequate development of the resources of the Columbia Basin for the benefit of the private power company. The next step is plain and obvious. The Corps of Engineers will build the 570-foot Bruces Eddy Dam largely for flood control with nonreimbursable charges and the 5 private power companies comprising the Northwest Power combine will be around insisting upon congressional approval of a partnership whereby the 5-company combine will install the generating facilities and sell the power.

During the discussion of Hells Canyon in committee and in the debate, great fears were expressed about the protection of water rights if the Hells Canyon Dam were built. Special protective provisions were written into the Hells Canyon bill to insure that water rights, both agricultural and domestic, would be protected. But here there is no protection for water rights except the general law of the Flood Control Act and the Federal Power Act.

This demonstrates two things: That the furor about protection of water rights in the Hells Canyon discussion was a smokescreen to hide the real issue of inadequate development of the river resources and that there is ample protection in the general law and the precedents of the last 50 years to prevent any invasion of water rights.

This House, which has refused to consider Hells Canyon and Fryingpan-Arkansas projects even though favorably reported by House committees, would even more decisively veto the Bruces Eddy project which failed to secure the support of the House committee. But the House is not given a chance to debate and discuss this project and is placed in a position of taking it or leaving it in an important and far-reaching conference report.

But the House will have another chance at this project when the appropriation for construction of the dam here authorized is submitted. And it is not too early to start to consider the price that we are already beginning to pay for the loss of Hells Canyon, a price that is going to get greater and greater through the years if such projects as this Bruces Eddy project continue to receive authorization.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] 2 minutes.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I am sure, is laboring under a misunderstanding on what is contained in this conference report with respect to the flood control items for the Susquehanna River. I desire to clarify the record, and to make certain about these items I wish to ask certain questions of the chairman of the committee handling this bill.

I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not a fact that the item for the upper Susquehanna River carried in this conference report was recommended by the Army engineers?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Was not this item approved by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. COLE. Is it a fact that none of the dams authorized in this item are located in New York State?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. They are in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. COLE. Is it not a fact that the cost-benefit ratio of this item in the upper Susquehanna is an unusually high cost ratio?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Very good—53 to 1.

Mr. COLE. On the basis of that I can see no reason for rejecting this conference report because of that item for the upper Susquehanna.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Why does it say in the report, No. 29, "New York and Pennsylvania," if it is located solely in Pennsylvania?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is part of the comprehensive basic plan.

Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. DONDERO, 5 minutes.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DONDERO. Not at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to say that this bill is a comprehensive bill. It contains 85 projects put in by the Committee on Public Works and 23 projects added by the Senate. They are situated in more than 36 States, and while there might be some technical complaint that the actual report of the Army engineers may not have been filed in every project, nevertheless the Army engineers came before us and approved and recommended that these projects be adopted, and they were adopted by the committee.

This particular item in dispute in New York and Pennsylvania was put in by the Senate.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. I thank the gentleman from Michigan.

Might I ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], on the project for the West Mahoning in the bill at page 39—actually it was never scheduled for an open hearing and that those who were interested in it had requested to be notified by the clerk of the committee but did not have a chance to come in and make their objections.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. We heard the Army engineers and had a rather full statement on the matter.

Mr. FULTON. But the people who wanted to oppose were not giving a chance to be heard, those who were interested in the Ohio River development.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If they asked for it it was after we had closed the hearings.

Mr. FULTON. No, it was before, but they did not have a chance to be heard. As a matter of fact on this particular development there is no plan yet because the plans are to be prepared by the Chief of the Army Engineers. Is that not a fact?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The plans are substantially complete as of the moment. This project is well understood by the people in that area, it is very much needed and we feel it was entirely justified.

Mr. FULTON. There is no intention that by the development of this particularly dam on the West Mahoning Branch to use it as an excuse for the development of the Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Absolutely not. We made certain of that.

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman will make sure this is not a subterfuge to develop the Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal, a project that will throw 11,000 or 12,000 workers out of work in the Pennsylvania-Ohio area?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The gentleman can rely on that.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not see why we should be so much agitated by this report that has come back from the committee. No one is seeking to appropriate any money. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and his very efficient committee will have all that to do later. Here is a committee, of which these gentlemen are members, that has done a fine job. They have surveyed probably two or three hundred projects. They had not only the Army engineers' figures but they come to us with their recommendation. That is what they are doing. They are recommending that these projects be considered and that is what will be done. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and his committee will have a chance to pass on them. Just because the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], great man that he is, finds a few bad items in here is no reason why the House should turn them all down. We are not asking here for a penny.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Will the gentleman give us the number of projects included in the House bill, the total amount of money, and the number included by the Senate and the total amount of money involved?

Mr. DONDERO. There were included in the House bill 85 projects, the amount of money involved $1,343 million. The Senate added 23, amounting to about $300 million, including navigation and flood control.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so many extend their remarks in the RECORD at this point on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, while I am a member of the Public Works Committee which reported out the rivers and harbors bill I opposed the bill and must oppose the conference report.

This legislation while it provides for some worthwhile projects is topheavy with pork. It is a typical election year pork barrel bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 130, noes 31.

So the conference report was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that the State wildlife agencies in Idaho, Oregon, and Washington have each urged postponement of consideration of this project on the basis that studies of its effects on fish and wildlife are incomplete. They indicate that the results from their field investigations will be available in a period of 2 or 3 years. At the end of this time they will be able to more accurately assess the losses from this project and offer recommendations for offsetting them if these can be developed.

I fail to see the justification for authorization of Bruces Eddy in the absence of this basic biological information—particularly in view of the extremely rich fish and wildlife resources of this Clearwater region. Nowhere in the country can one find a more bountiful variety of game animals living under wilderness conditions.

The 49-mile reservoir created on the North Fork of the Clearwater by Bruces Eddy Dam would flood out winter ranges of what is believed to be the country's largest elk herd. These low areas are of vital importance to thousands of deer and elk during severe winters and the wildlife agencies point out that any reduction in them may have devastating effects upon these herds. No wonder that sportsmen and leading conservation groups are opposing the desecration of the North Fork in the absence of concrete recommendations for offsetting these probable losses to wildlife.

The sport and commercial fisheries of the Clearwater are of great economic importance to this area as well as the downstream sections of the Columbia. These fisheries have been restored through management programs to the point where they now support thousands of sport fishermen visits annually. Last year, anglers spent 5,200 days on the North Fork where Bruces Eddy Dam would be built. These people enjoyed stream fishing at its best in some of the West's finest mountain water while taking over 42,000 trout.

We should carefully consider any course of action that would endanger the productivity of these waters, particularly in view of the findings of the wildlife agencies that show the catch of steelhead trout, which makes up 60 percent of the total take of trout, would be destroyed as a result of the 570-foot Bruces Eddy Dam. There is no known way to get these sea-run fish back and forth over obstructions of this height.

At a time when the need for outdoor recreation is becoming more and more apparent and the pressures of our hectic modern-day pace are taking an ever-increasing toll of our bodies and minds, we must look carefully at the recreational potential of an area like the Clearwater before writing it off to river development. We see in our people many unhealthy signs of these pressures. They serve to point up the need for considering recreational values, as well as the benefits that might be derived from hydroelectric power and flood-control facilities, in determining the most desirable use for our rich lands.

In place of the magnificent beauty of the North Fork Gorge, Bruces Eddy Dam with its fluctuating water levels would leave unsightly scars along steep-walled mountainous canyons. Should not we stop to weigh these losses along with the many benefits that would accrue from the wise use of the fish, wildlife and scenic resources of this wilderness country?

It would seem that these are the things that conservationists in Idaho and throughout the Nation are thinking of when they ask for further studies to determine effects of this dam. Is it not fair for them to ask that this information be made available before we undertake any consideration of legislation to authorize this dam? These people have a stake in this country and feel an obligation to protect it for their children and the future generations of Americans that stand to gain even more from the outdoor living that this region is capable of providing.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this country have a right to request careful study of the proposals for authorization of Bruces Eddy Dam. We should postpone this action until an assessment of fish, wildlife and recreational resources has been completed.

I predict that the Congress will rue the day that this back door method of authorizing the construction of a dam was allowed to pass.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 653) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by subcommittee authorized by the chairman, in addition to the authority contained in any other resolution, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations relating to all matters involving safety of life at sea, including but not limited to—

(1) adequacy of existing construction standards of passenger vessels;

SHOSHONE AND ARAPAHOE INDIAN TRIBES

Mr. HALEY submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2956)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation are authorized to convey to the United States the tribes' interests in the 388.23 acres of land that are described in section 2 of the Act, subject to a reservation to the tribes of all minerals, including oil and gas, and mineral rights, which may be exercised only in a manner that does not interfere with the construction and operation of the dam site and reservoir of Anchor Dam, a part of the Owl Creek unit, Missouri River Basin project in Hot Springs County, near Thermopolis, Wyoming. The conveyance shall be for a price that is mutually agreeable to the tribes and to the Secretary of the Interior as representing fair and just compensation for the land taken. If the tribes and the Secretary fail to agree on a price to be paid for said land, the Secretary shall report that fact to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the first day of the Eighty-fifth Congress, and the Secretary is authorized, effective thirty days after said report is filed, to proceed to acquire such land by eminent domain. The consideration payable to the tribes pursuant to this Act shall be paid out of funds appropriated for the Missouri River Basin project and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit and for the use of the respective tribes in accordance with the provisions of the Act of May 19, 1947 (61 Stat. 102), as amended by the Act of August 30, 1951 (65 Stat. 208).

"SEC. 2. The lands that are referred to in section 1 of this Act are: Lots 1 and 2, section 13, northwest quarter, north half southwest quarter, west half, northeast quarter, and northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 24, township 8 north, range 1 west, Wind River meridian, Wyoming, containing 388.23 acres.

"SEC. 3. In the event of the failure or abandonment of the Anchor Dam feature of the Owl Creek unit the interest in the land acquired pursuant to this Act shall be reconveyed by the Secretary of the Interior to the tribes and the title shall be held in the same manner it was held before such acquisition: Provided, That the purchase price paid by the United States shall be returned by the tribes.

"SEC. 4. The portion of the construction costs of the Owl Creek unit that is allocable to the irrigable lands of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes of the Wind River Reservation shall be a lien against such lands, but the assessment and collection of such costs shall be deferred in accordance with the provisions of the Act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564). The irrigable lands of the tribes shall be entitled to their pro rata share of the water storage and regulation benefits accruing from the construction and operation of the Owl Creek unit upon payment by the tribes, under appropriate contract, of their pro rata share of the annual operation and maintenance costs of the Owl Creek unit.

"SEC. 5. The members of the Shoshone and Arapahoe Tribes shall have the right to fish on the lake created by Anchor Dam, without a State license, but the Indians shall be subject to all other provisions of applicable conservation laws and regulations."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The two areas of disagreement concerned the fair and just compensation to be paid for the conveyance and the wording in the respective sections 5.

The House-approved bill provided that the conveyance would be for a price that is mutually agreeable to the tribes and the Secretary of the Interior and would be based upon the fair market value of the land. The Senate-passed bill provided for no compensation but, in lieu thereof, relief to the tribes from payment of construction charges of the Owl Creek unit. The Senate-approved bill also provided that the Secretary of the Interior would acquire the land by eminent domain if, after 30 days following enactment of this legislation, the tribes failed to agree to the conveyance. The amendment agreed upon by the conferees provides that if the tribes and the Secretary fail to agree on fair and just compensation for the conveyance, the Secretary shall report such fact to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the first day of the 85th Congress. In this event the Secretary is authorized, 30 days after filing said report, to institute eminent-domain proceedings.

The conferees agreed to substitute section 5 of the Senate-approved bill for section 5 of the House-approved bill. The Senate-approved section provides that the Indians shall be permitted to fish on the lake created by Anchor Dam, without a State license, whereas the House version permitted the Indians to fish on the lake without a license, as if the lake were within the exterior boundaries of the Wind River Reservation. The conferees thought that the words "as if the lake were within the exterior boundaries of the Wind River Reservation" might someday be used to contend that the Indians had the right to keep others from fishing on the waters outside the reservation as they do have within the reservation itself. In both instances the Indian fishermen will be subject to all other provisions of applicable conservation laws and regulations.

In all other respects the conferees agreed on the House-approved H. R. 10183.

CLAIR ENGLE,
A. L. MILLER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. HALEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LITTLE WOOD RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT, IDAHO

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3227) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Little Wood River reclamation project, Idaho.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the principal purposes of improving the irrigation water supply of approximately 10,000 acres of land in Blaine County, Idaho, and assisting in the control of floods, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to undertake an enlargement of the Little Wood River Reservoir and to operate and maintain the same in accordance with the Federal reclamation laws (act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto). Any contract entered into under section 9, subsection (d), of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 (53 Stat. 1187, 1193; 43 U. S. C. 485h) for payment of those portions of the costs of constructing, operating, and maintaining the Little Wood River project which are properly allocable to irrigation and which are assigned to be paid by the contracting organization shall provide for the repayment of the construction cost over a period of not more than 40 years or as near thereto as is consistent with the adoption and operation of a variable payment formula which, being based on full repayment within the period stated under average conditions, permits variance in the required annual payments in the light of economic factors pertinent to the ability of the organization to pay.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is authorized to construct minimum basic public recreational facilities in connection with the Little Wood River project and to enter into appropriate arrangements for the operation and maintenance of the same by a State or local agency or organization. The cost of such facilities shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable under the reclamation laws.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary may make such reasonable provision in the works of the Little Wood River project as, upon further study in accordance with section 2 of the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1080, 16 U. S. C. 661a), he finds to be required for the preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife. An appropriate portion of the construction cost of the project shall be allocated as provided in said act and it, together with the portion of the construction cost allocated to flood control and the portions of the operation and maintenance costs allocated to these functions or the capitalized value of the equivalent thereof, shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable under the reclamation laws.

(b) So far the Secretary finds the same to be consistent with safety and with efficient operation or the primary purpose of the Little Wood River project, the project waters in the project area shall be open to free public use for lawful hunting and fishing purposes, and free access to the waters for those purposes shall be assured.

(c) Little Wood River Reservoir shall be operated in accord with water rights, under decree or permit, which are valid under the laws of the State of Idaho, but the Congress, taking cognizance of the need for clarification of certain of these rights in some formal manner effective under Idaho law, particularly as between the Fish and Game Department of said State and the water users under the Little Wood River project or their organizations, does not by this declaration accept for or impose upon the United States, its officers or employees any responsibility for determining the correctness of such claims of right and does not, either by the enactment of this act or by any action taken pursuant thereto, intend to and or prejudice the claims of any party to a dispute with respect thereto or to impose upon any party to a contract entered into under this act any obligation with respect to such rights that does not exist under the laws of the State of Idaho or to require that water, other than that which is available under established rights, shall be used primarily either for irrigation or for the preservation of fish and wildlife resources.

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for construction of the Little Wood River project $1,880,000 plus such amounts, if any, as may be required by reason of changes in construction costs as indicated by engineering cost indexes applicable to the types of construction involved therein and, in addition, such amounts as may be required to operate and maintain said project.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, this is the bill that was programed and that we had some discussion on earlier in the day. It was the intention to bring the bill up if possible, and the minority leadership and the Democratic leadership spontaneously agreed on bringing up the bill at this time. It makes for a happy ending to a very pleasant day and a very pleasant association.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 7850 was laid on the table.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will it be in order after the House has adjourned for all Members to insert their remarks in the RECORD and have that permission for a period of 10 or 15 days?

The SPEAKER. The majority leader usually asks unanimous consent for that permission, and I am sure it will be provided.

INDEPENDENCE NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11123) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain additional property to be included within the Independence National Historical Park, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Independence National Historical Park, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1948 (16 U. S. C., sec. 407m and the following), is amended by inserting immediately after the first section thereof the following new section:

"1A. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire by donation or with donated funds, or to acquire by purchase, all of the land and buildings immediately adjacent to Old St. Joseph's Church, situated on the east side of Fourth Street between Walnut Street and Willings Alley excepting the land and building known as 211–227 South Fourth Street, and all of the land and buildings on the south side of Walnut Street, east of Fourth Street, up to and including number 324 Walnut Street, to be included within the Independence National Historical Park. The Secretary shall first enter into an agreement with the proprietor or proprietors of Old St. Joseph's Church property, such agreement to contain the usual and customary provisions for the protection of the property, assuring its physical maintenance, without expense to the United States, as a part of the Independence National Historical Park, and without any limitation or control over its use for customary church purposes."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of such act is amended by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not exceeding $900,000, as may be necessary to acquire the property referred to in section 1A of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BYRNE].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman give me an explanation of the bill, and tell us where this area is in Philadelphia?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. The church that is the subject of this bill is surrounded by buildings. The old St. Joseph's Church, which survived the first test of religious freedom in the English-speaking world in 1753, is surrounded by buildings. To reach that church one has to go up an alley off Walnut Street. My bill will permit taking of the buildings which surround the alley to Walnut Street, and down Fourth Street, excluding the New Amsterdam Insurance Building to be demolished.

Mr. PILLION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PILLION. The property we talked about is excluded?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Yes. The amendment will do that.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think the amendment that excludes the New Amsterdam Insurance Co. makes this bill quite proper, and I urge its passage.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. What is the cost of this project?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Nine hundred thousand dollars. The committee reduced it from $1,500,000.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. What will the Government do with the land? Will it make use of the land?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. It will be part of the Independence Mall, which is 100 feet away from this church.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does it connect up with the Independence Mall?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Yes, it will be part of the Independence Mall, but the church will take care of its own property.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. This is going to cost the Federal taxpayers of all the country $900,000?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Yes. This is one of the greatest historical places, in the country, I might say.

Mr. GROSS. Whom will this benefit?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. It will benefit the whole Nation.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I think this is a most important bill. The Independence Hall in Philadelphia does not belong to the citizens of Philadelphia, it belongs to the world. The Declaration of Independence of our great country was signed there. People come to Philadelphia from all over the world to see it. There is a wonderful project up there of improving the mall. This would be an eyesore. If we do not pass this bill and make this improvement I think it would be a shame. It is a very good bill and I urge its passage.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. This has bipartisan support. Senator EDWARD MARTIN is the one who came up with the idea. He is a Republican from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the church there is the oldest church in the English-speaking world?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. No, I did not say that. I said that it stood the first test of religious freedom and freedom of religious worship in the English-speaking world—in 1753.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND. Is not this one of the most important and most famous units of the National Parks Service?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I would say it is.

Mr. BOLAND. Does not the United States Government take the responsibility now for Independence Hall?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. Yes, it does.

Mr. BOLAND. This will just make it a better place and a greater shrine; is that not correct?

Mr. BYRNE of Pennsylvania. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, as amended?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, BUNCOMBE COUNTY, N. C.

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10238) to authorize and direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to accept certain land in Buncombe County, N. C., for cemetery purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to accept for and in the name of the United States from the city of Asheville, N. C., by deed satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States, title to two tracts of land in Buncombe County, N. C., being a portion of the property owned by the city of Asheville, known as the Riverside Cemetery, and to maintain such tracts for the burial of veterans of the Armed Forces of the United States who die in the Veterans' Administration Hospital, Oteen, N. C.

SEC. 2. The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize Members who have special orders for today. But, at any time that there is business to be transacted, the Chair hopes that Members will yield so that the House may proceed with its business.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Would the Speaker recognize me for the purpose of moving that the House accept the Senate amendments to the bill, H. R. 6888.

The SPEAKER. Has the committee authorized the gentleman to make that request?

Mr. KEATING. No, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman.

FINAL REPORT

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MINSHALL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, when the 1st session of the 84th Congress adjourned just one year ago on August 2, I addressed my colleagues with a final report on the record of that session. The encouraging and spontaneous response to that summation of our work in 1955 has prompted me to again report on the accomplishments of this, the 2d session of the 84th Congress.

Within a short time, we will again adjourn after 7 months in session during which time over 5,200 bills have been introduced and over 800 enacted into law.

We have spent many hours each day in committee and on the floor preparing and debating the legislation comprising this record, and each of us has been diligent in our desire to do what we believe is best for our district and country.

I am proud to report that of nearly 300 roll and quorum calls during the past 2 years I have missed only 2 rollcall votes and 3 quorum calls.

The record of the 84th Congress is now complete. We await the decision of the American people.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The largest political storm to brew during the 2d session was over the Nation's defense program.

Because each of our citizens is acutely aware of the Communist menace and the threat of enemy aggression, everyone has paid considerable attention to the development and maintenance of our defense establishment. Thus, it could only be expected that President Eisenhower's opposition should make our Pentagon an arena for political demagoguery.

DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS

In his budget request, the President asked the Congress to appropriate $34,147,850,000 for the Department of Defense. This amount, according to the testimony of high military and civilian officials, would "insure a well-rounded military establishment in fiscal year 1957."

The House Committee on Appropriations agreed with this basic premise, although they reduced the request by approximately one-half billion dollars. The House agreed to this amount and appropriated $33,635,066,000.

After much partisan maneuvering in the Senate, which included the proposing of fantastic and preposterous sums not in accord with any fiscal responsibility, the final figure for our defense budget was $34,656,727,000. This amount was appropriated and subsequently approved by the White House.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH BUSINESS

One feature of the Defense Department appropriation bill which was added last year was the requirement which forced the Department to obtain approval from the Appropriations Committees before they could halt Government competition with private enterprise. This was a deliberate roadblock to administration attempts to get the Government out of business, and the Congress finally removed this restrictive proposal from the 1957 appropriation legislation.

The opposition, however, inserted this provision in a new bill, and the administration attempts to reduce Government competition with private enterprise might have again been wrapped in procedural redtape if the new bill had not died in the Senate.

OTHER DEFENSE LEGISLATION

The Congress approved a $1.4 billion program of naval construction and conversion for 1957, including a nuclear-powered cruiser and 60,000-ton aircraft carrier. The Eisenhower proposal for an atomic-powered peace ship was amended along partisan lines, and the proposal he finally signed resembled only vaguely his original proposal.

Measures providing for additional top-level scientific, professional, and administrative positions in defense agencies, and for the installation of $15.4 million worth of equipment to be used by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics were also approved.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The field of foreign policy provided one area of relative bipartisan agreement and accomplishment. This spirit of cooperation has prevailed throughout the 84th Congress and provides a striking testimonial to the President's leadership and his desire to keep all of the legislative leaders informed on the status of our relations with other nations.

RED CHINA

Indicative of this bipartisan approach to the accomplishment of a firm foreign policy was the unanimous approval by both the House and Senate of a resolution expressing the sense of Congress against the admission of the Communist regime in China as the representative of China in the United Nations.

CLEVELAND PAN-AMERICAN GAMES

Congress also passed a bill authorizing the expenditure of $5 million in Federal funds for the purpose of promoting and insuring the success of the pan-American Games to be held at Cleveland in 1959, and then approved an initial appropriation of $100,000 to be expended in planning the games.

This congressional action, as well as the action and enthusiasm on the part of State and local officials in Ohio, will prove to be an invaluable asset toward the improvement of our relations with our American neighbors.

MUTUAL SECURITY

Despite a general feeling in the Congress to drastically reduce or terminate Federal expenditures for foreign aid, both Houses agreed to an appropriation of $3.7 billion for the mutual-security program.

Senate conferees agreed to a reduction from the $4.1 billion the Senate voted, and the House conferees agreed to the increase from the $3.4 billion the House had voted. The compromise total is about $1.1 billion less than the administration originally sought. Congress had previously authorized a $3.9 billion program.

POLICY OF LIBERATION

The House of Representatives also passed two resolutions to further our program of liberating the enslaved people of the world.

The first reaffirmed the policy of the United States to work for the reunification of Germany, Korea, and Vietnam; to work for the admission of those nations and Japan to the United Nations; and to work for the peaceful achievement of freedom and independence of peoples now under Soviet and Chinese Communist bondage.

The second expressed the sympathy and encouragement of the House of Representatives for the people of Poland in their revolt at Poznan, against Communist dictatorship.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

A marked accomplishment of the Eisenhower administration was the balancing of the 1956 Federal budget. On June 30, 1956, when the total receipts and expenditures during the previous 12 months had been tabulated, the American people found they had a surplus of $1.754 billion in their Treasury which could be utilized to reduce the Federal debt.

Anticipating another year of unprecedented prosperity, the administration has set its sights on a balanced budget for 1957, and it is most probable that the national debt can be further reduced.

For these reasons, Congress was asked to provide a temporary increase in the debt ceiling of only $2 billion as contrasted to the previous requests of twice that amount. Congress approved this lower request.

1957 APPROPRIATIONS

Including the enormous Department of Defense appropriation and other expenditures for national security, which account for 61.3 percent of the total 1957 budget, Congress was asked to appropriate $59,950,336,809 for the 1957 fiscal year.

Upon review of this request, Congress appropriated a total of $59,729,807,628 which was $220,529,181 less than the President recommended. This amount, coupled with unobligated balances and compared to estimated tax receipts of over $66 billion, should provide a surplus on June 30, 1957, of about $2 billion.

TAXES

Corporate and excise tax rates were extended for another year although certain excise taxes, including those on theater admissions, radio and television parts, and foreign air travel, were either repealed or reduced in separate bills.

Realizing that our internal revenue laws have become discriminatory in many ways and oppressive in others, but mindful of the fact that the present level of Federal receipts can only be lowered gradually, a complete study for the revision of these laws has been ordered which, it is hoped, will lead to legislation improving the tax laws and reducing the tax burden of our individual citizens. With proper planning, it may soon be possible to enact another tax cut similar to the $7.4 billion reduction in taxes enacted in 1954 during the 83d Congress.

BUSINESS

Congress enacted two bills to strengthen the antitrust laws. One increased the fines under the Sherman Antitrust Act, and the other defined suits for damages under the antitrust code.

A third bill defining "good faith" in the defense against price discrimination charges under the Robinson-Patman Act was approved by the House of Representatives but died in the Senate. This bill was designed to aid small business and received strong support from small business establishments throughout the Nation.

Congress also enacted a bill to enable automobile dealers to bring suit against automobile manufacturers on the termination of franchises under the antitrust laws, but a bill prescribing Federal policy and procedure in connection with construction contracts made by the executive agencies failed of passage in the House.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM

After more than a year of partisan bickering, the Congress junked President Eisenhower's program for a bond-financed Federal highway system and enacted an acceptable $24.8 billion interstate highway program to be paid for by increased user's taxes. This is the first long-term Federal road-building program in the Nation's history.

Although a year late in starting, the American driving public can now look forward to improved and safer highways. Ohio's share of this Federal interstate program is expected to exceed $201 million in just the next 3 years. An additional $74 million in Federal funds will be made available to Ohio for the building and improvement of primary, secondary, and urban roads.

GREAT LAKES SHIPPING

The House-approved project to deepen the Great Lakes connecting channels between Lakes Erie and Huron and between Lakes Huron and Superior was passed by the Senate during the second session and signed by the President. This is an important step in the preparation for increased ocean shipping in the Great Lakes via the St. Lawrence Seaway.

A bill to encourage the construction and maintenance of modern Great Lakes bulk-cargo vessels in the interest of peacetime commerce and the national defense which was sponsored by several Great Lakes Congressmen failed to gain House approval.

HOUSING LEGISLATION

After much debate, the Congress approved a housing bill extending and liberalizing the FHA and military housing programs and authorizing 35,000 more public-housing units annually for 2 years.

The FHA home-improvement loan authority was extended for 3 years with an increase to $3,500 from $2,500 in loan maximums for a single-family dwelling and an increase in the repayment time to 5 years from 3. A cosigner may now endorse an FHA-insured mortgage of a mortgagee aged 60 or older and allows FHA to insure up to 90 percent of a mortgage on housing built especially for elderly persons by nonprofit organizations.

LABOR

The 84th Congress has taken little action on President Eisenhower's labor program. Benefits under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act have been increased, as have the benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937. But no action has been taken on the proposal to protect beneficiaries of employee welfare and pension plans by requiring registration and full disclosure of the financial operations of the plans; no action has been taken on the proposal to promote occupational safety by providing grants-in-aid to improve State programs; no action has been taken on the proposal to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in the payment of wages; and no action was taken on the President's proposed amendments to improve the Taft-Hartley Act.

SOCIAL SECURITY

After exhaustive hearings the Senate, during this second session, approved with amendments a House social security bill which extends social-security coverage. Benefiting under the new law are self-employed professional groups; additional farm operators, share farmers, and agricultural workers; certain ministers; employees of nonprofit organizations; and State and local government employees.

The new act reduces from 65 to 62 the age at which all women may become eligible for benefits, provides for the payment of disability-insurance benefits to permanently and totally disabled workers, continues monthly benefits to disabled children over 18 years of age, and increases the tax rate by one-fourth of 1 percent on the employer and the employee.

POWER DEVELOPMENT

In a move to allow the development of power by private industry rather than by the Federal Government, the Congress rejected legislation providing for Federal development of power on the Niagara River in New York and on the Snake River in Idaho. The latter proposal, popularly known as the Hells Canyon bill, was defeated on the House floor, and the Niagara project was not reported from the Committee on Rules before Congress adjourned. Similarly the House killed the Federal development of the Frying Pan-Arkansas reclamation project.

Of major importance, however, was congressional approval for the Federal development of the upper Colorado River project. This item was high on the administration's list of legislative proposals.

VETERANS

Several important bills assisting our veterans were approved by the Congress, but the veterans' pension bill failed of passage.

GI HOME-LOAN PROGRAM

The fact that approximately 11 million veterans have not been able to take advantage of their entitlement under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act for a guaranteed home loan encouraged Congress to extend this particular provision an additional year to July 25, 1958. Further, the new law provides that if a loan report or an application for a loan guaranty has been received by the Veterans' Administration on or before July 25, 1958, such loan may be guaranteed or insured up to July 25, 1959.

TAX CREDIT FOR RETIRED PAY

Another law enacted during the second session permits members of the Armed Forces to take income-tax credit for retirement income under the provisions of the Revenue Code and the Social Security Act.

KOREAN GI BILL

Veterans of the Korean war attending school under the GI bill were assisted when Congress passed a bill exempting courses leading to standard college degrees offered by nonprofit educational institutions of higher learning from the provisions of the act prohibiting the enrollment of eligible veterans under that act when such courses have been in operation for less than 2 years.

SURVIVORS' BENEFITS

The enactment of the Servicemen's and Veterans' Survivor Benefits Act was an integral part of President Eisenhower's legislative program. This act provides a general revision and liberalization of benefits for the survivors of servicemen and veterans and puts military personnel under social security.

VETERANS' PENSIONS

The House of Representatives passed two veterans' pension bills. The first would provide for increased pensions for disabled veterans whose annual incomes did not exceed $1,400 if single or $2,700 if with dependents regardless of whether or not the disablement was service-connected. The second bill provided an increase in the rates of compensation payable to veterans for service-connected disabilities and in the rates of additional allowances for dependents which are payable to veterans whose disabilities are rated 50 percent or more.

Neither bill was acted upon by the Senate.

AGRICULTURE

RIGID VERSUS FLEXIBLE PRICE SUPPORTS

As explained last year in my first session report, a new era in politics was born when the various labor union leaders deserted their consumer ranks and aided the partisan Democrats in pushing a bill through Congress which would restore high rigid price supports and scuttle the flexible price-support program.

This bill had passed the House before we adjourned one year ago, and shortly after Congress reconvened in January the Senate added their approval to this politically-inspired legislation.

President Eisenhower vetoed this bill in what was called the most courageous act performed by a Chief Executive in recent years and asked Congress to enact a soil-bank program. No effort was made to override the veto.

SOIL-BANK PROGRAM

Following the President's veto of the rigid price support bill, the Congress agreed to the Eisenhower soil-bank program which then became law.

This measure authorizes $1.2 billion for a voluntary soil-bank program to reduce the production acreage of crops in surplus supply, encourages the disposal of surpluses at home and abroad, and fixed feed-grain supports at 76 percent of parity.

Farm leaders lauded the President for this program.

GOVERNMENT EFFICIENCY

Foremost in the administration's endeavors to improve the operation of our Federal Government has been the implementation of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

The administration has made a creditable record in adopting some 75 of these recommendations. But where legislative action will be necessary before 140 of the total 314 recommendations can be adopted, the Democrat-controlled Congress has enacted legislation to implement only 30 of these proposals.

Late this spring, President Eisenhower's special assistant for the Hoover report listed 16 measures pending before the Congress to implement Hoover recommendations which deserved high priority. Only half of these 16 measures have been enacted as we adjourn this 84th Congress. The remainder were either shelved in committee or defeated on the floor.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING PROCEDURES

One of the most important reorganization measures adopted by the Congress during the second session was the bill to improve governmental budgeting and accounting methods and procedures. This new act places the entire governmental financial structure on an annual accrued expenditure basis and permits a much closer supervision by the Congress over the expenditures of the executive branch of the Government.

POSTAL RATE INCREASE

A House-approved bill designed to alleviate the postal deficit by increasing the rates on first, second, and third class mail died in Senate committee. This, too, was an important part of the President's program, and received overwhelming support in two Minshall polls conducted among the residents of Ohio's 23d District.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

There were several important bills of a general nature considered during the second session.

CIVIL RIGHTS

A key proposal in President Eisenhower's legislative program was the enactment of a comprehensive Civil Rights program.

The House of Representatives, in the last days of the session now ending, approved a bill which would have established a Commission on Civil Rights, created a Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice under an Assistant Attorney General, and given the United States district courts concurrent jurisdiction with State courts to enforce civil actions against offenders, but the Senate had insufficient time before adjournment to press for action. The bill thus died in Senate committee.

ALASKA-HAWAII STATEHOOD

In another field of inactivity, Congress failed to grant statehood to either Alaska or Hawaii. The bills were rejected in the first session and not considered during 1956.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Congress failed also to enact a school construction bill which was another important part of the President's program. There can be little doubt that there is a critical shortage of classrooms in the Nation's schools, but the question was how should the Federal Government participate in this construction, and a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives refused to approve the proposal which was presented on the House floor.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

In the exercise of jurisdiction over the waterways of the Nation, Congress enacted the Water Pollution Control Act to assist States and local governments in the prevention and control of water pollution.

Comprehensive programs for water-pollution control are established, the Surgeon General of the United States is instructed to support and aid technical research through investigation, training and information programs, and enforcement measures against the pollution of interstate waters are clearly spelled out.

The act also authorized the appropriation of $3 million a year for the next 5 years for grants to States' water pollution control programs, and authorized a 10-year $500 million program of grants to the States for construction of necessary treatment works to prevent the discharge of untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste into any waters.

NARCOTICS CONTROL ACT

Congress also amended present narcotics laws to strengthen the penalties for unlawful acquisition, transportation, and sales of narcotics, and provides a death penalty for the sale of heroin to juveniles. The new act undoubtedly will be of invaluable assistance to law enforcement officers in curtailing the traffic of narcotics.

OLIVER P. BOLTON

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives will suffer a great and serious loss in the retirement of our distinguished colleague, the Honorable OLIVER P. BOLTON. Few men ever seated in this august body have earned for themselves in 4 short years the respect and honor of fellow Members as has the gentleman from Ohio. Without contradiction I can say that each of us has received great benefit from the wisdom and knowledge he has displayed as one of the outstanding legislators in American history.

I have had the privilege of knowing the gentleman from Ohio perhaps longer than any other Member of this great body with the one notable exception, his good and wonderful mother, the Honorable FRANCES P. BOLTON, who, as you all know, succeeded the late, distinguished Chester Bolton, her husband, in this House. I knew OLLIE BOLTON in schooldays before he graduated from Harvard University in 1939. At the outset of World War II we served in the Army together. He later served with distinction in the Pacific theater and was honorably discharged after more than 5 years of service. I remember well his successful career as an attorney after his graduation from Western Reserve University Law School in 1947, how we campaigned together for the Ohio Legislature, and his brilliance as president and later national committeeman of the Ohio Young Republicans.

OLIVER BOLTON will leave the Congress at the conclusion of this term through personal choice. In doing so, he is forsaking a brilliant future as a legislative leader solely out of consideration for his personal health and the security of his family—a decision based upon the single criterion with which he has approached each major decision in his life: "Regardless of my personal desires, what is best for those around me."

Thus, it was a distinct honor for me when I was elected to the House of Representatives to serve with my good friend. During these past 2 years, I have found his energy to be a challenge, I have found his advice to be excellent and unimpeachable, and I have found his sincerity and devotion to his friends and to duty unsurpassed.

While it is with deep regret that I watch OLLIE BOLTON retire from the Congress, I know that it is not "goodby"; for if his past record is any indication, Ollie's future in his private life will find him as a great civic leader, a wonderful father, and a devoted friend to each of us.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks that the gentleman has just made. Let me say first that he has made a very splendid statement.

I have known OLIVER BOLTON for something over 2 years. The first time I met him he came down to my home town. He spoke in behalf of the party he loved at a Lincoln Day dinner. I was impressed with his remarks, so were all who know of his work in behalf of his party, in behalf of his community, and in behalf of his State and in behalf of his Nation, well known to the people of Ohio and beyond the borders of Ohio.

I have also been impressed with the tremendous record he made as a freshman Congressman. When I came down to Washington myself and became associated with OLLIE BOLTON I was more deeply impressed as I saw him work. The fervor with which he threw himself into his legislative activity was indeed a challenge for all of us who came here to the Halls of Congress for the first time, and it is with extreme regret personally to me that I see OLLIE BOLTON leave the Halls of Congress.

He has not been content to be just a Congressman; he has not been content just to hold office, but because of the intense desire he has had to serve his people and the country his own health has failed and it is necessary for him to leave us here.

We wish him well in the work that he will do in the future and we trust that he will find that his physical strength will return. I wish him many, many fruitful years of faithful service to the people of this Nation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MINSHALL] in the tribute that is being paid to one of our retiring colleagues, the Honorable OLIVER P. BOLTON, who, when the final gavel falls this evening will wind up at least his present career in the Congress of the United States.

It has been my pleasure and my privilege to know OLIVER BOLTON, or OLLIE, as we call him, since childhood; and, of course, to know very well his wonderful father and his wonderful mother.

It is unusual for a young man to take up public service as a career, yet OLIVER BOLTON, coming as he does from a distinguished family, has devoted himself and his life to public service. He has served well within the State of Ohio, and he has served with great and unusual ability as a national legislator.

It is with great regret that we see him leave the Halls of Congress, but I think we know that in the future we will hear from him again, because he is a man with a future, and his contributions to the welfare of his country and his Nation have not only been great in the past, but I am certain will be even greater in the future.

All of us from Ohio give him our best wishes and our highest regards as he leaves us here tonight and we hope we may see much of him in the future.

Mr. MINSHALL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I join with his other friends in expressing deep regret that OLIVER BOLTON is retiring from congressional service. I have been here for 32 years; I have seen many brilliant men, but I know of none who gave more promise than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON]. He is a young man of ability, character, and integrity. When he came here I am sure he was actuated by the sincere purpose of serving his State and his country well. We need more men like OLIVER BOLTON in our national life and it is with regret when one of his stature is separated from it with such a short service. I hope and trust that in the next few years he will regain his health and will enter a wider field of opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, as I stated, I am sorry to see OLIVER BOLTON leave. We all wish him the best and we hope the blessings of God will be with him.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to join with the other Members who have spoken with reference to this very fine man. It was my good fortune to have served with his father in the State Senate of Ohio. Chester Bolton distinguished himself there in such a way that he had no trouble being elected to the Congress.

While a Member of the House, those of us who were here remember Chester Bolton as having been a fine, high-class man with great capacity. We have also known Mrs. BOLTON and last year the fine work she did when she traveled all over the world, distinguishing herself as no other woman has ever done. She did this wonderful job all by herself. This boy of hers has a right to consider his mother as everybody considers his mother, and he can look back with great satisfaction and note what a fine legislator his mother has been.

Ollie, I hope everythings works out well for you.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, while OLLIE BOLTON comes from the other end of the State, the people of southwestern Ohio recognize the fine job he has done during the 4 years of his service as a Member of this House. They regret that a man of his ability, character, and integrity must leave the service of his country. It is just too bad that men like him must retire from the Congress because we need in public service men like OLIVER BOLTON.

Ollie, the people of southwestern Ohio wish you well.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much to join in this tribute being paid to our colleague from Ohio, OLLIE BOLTON. He has not been a Member of this body very long, but those of us who have had occasion to come in contact with him either on a personal or business basis have always found him of friendly disposition, we have always found him to be a wonderful fellow to do business with. In addition to that, he has been extremely capable and diligent in the conduct of the business of his office.

I trust that his health will continue to improve over the years. I look forward to great success in the business venture on which he is embarking and I look forward with hope that in years to come OLLIE BOLTON will return to public life because our country needs men of that stamp and character in the national service.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, as one who has been a Member of this House long enough to have served with OLIVER BOLTON'S father more than 22 years ago, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to OLIVER BOLTON as he bids us farewell tonight and wish him in the days to come life's richest blessings, the first of which is good health.

May you have good luck, Ollie, and God bless you.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, although I am from Pennsylvania, OLIVER BOLTON is well known in my district, as he represents a district next to mine. Everyone who knows Oliver admires and respects him. We will miss him in Congress; however, the people in his congressional district will never forget he served his Nation and he served his people in Ohio well. We will all miss him.

Mr. MINSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WESTLAND].

Mr. WESTLAND. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in paying a very well-deserved tribute here to a young man whom I consider to be probably my best friend in the Congress. We came together in the 83d Congress and have been associated rather closely since then. I have learned to appreciate tremendously this young man's ability, and I know that it is a loss not only to the Congress itself but to the country that OLLIE BOLTON has seen fit to leave us. In my opinion, he is the type of man that this country needs; a man of character and responsibility and integrity; a man who has been devoted to his job, and a man who stuck to his guns through thick and thin, I might say. Certainly, I want to join with the others, Ollie, in wishing that you would regain your full health, and at some future date to return to the Congress. I know that the people of your district will welcome that, and so will your colleagues in Congress. Good luck, Ollie.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I reemphasize and reiterate what has been said about you, Ollie. I think we are losing an invaluable Member of this House. It is my hope and trust that you can and will return here or elsewhere so that we and the people of Ohio will benefit from your experience, your integrity, and your ability.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, there are many thoughts that come to my mind, expressions from the heart, that I would like to give voice to in paying respects to this distinguished young man who is leaving us. Because of the circumstances and the lateness of the hour, I will refrain from giving expression to those feelings of sentiment. However, I do want to say what a treasure it has been to me, one of the outstanding experiences of my life. To have served in this great body with the distinguished father of this young man and then with his illustrious mother and now to have served with him is a great experience and treasure of my lifetime. I regret deeply that he is leaving us and I wish him Godspeed.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. BUDGE].

Mr. BUDGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my regret at OLIVER BOLTON'S leaving this body. One of the greatest pleasures I have had during the last 2 years has been my acquaintance and association with him. I know that the Congress of the United States and the people generally will suffer a great loss by his failure to continue to serve in this body. We all wish him the best of luck in everything.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I join in the tributes being paid to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON]. It is unusual to be permitted to serve with the father, the mother, and then the son, especially when all have been so constructive. It is fortunate for the country to have given a father, a mother, and a son who are not only enjoyable but educational, I will say, to the rest of us, and I sincerely hope that when next we see him in public life it will be over in the other body, the Senate of the United States, where he should be now.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HIESTAND].

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to add my thoughts to those already expressed. OLIVER BOLTON served on the Committee on Banking and Currency. He proved to be an able Congressman, a straight thinker, and a fearless speaker of his opinions. We respect him. We hate to lose him.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to join in these tributes to our colleague, OLIVER BOLTON. I served with his father, Chester Bolton, in the Congress of the United States. He was a wonderfully fine man to him and to his mother and Oliver is a worthy successor. I remember the dean of the cathedral in Cleveland told me that there was no finer man anywhere than Chester Bolton or any man who did more for his church than Oliver's illustrious father. Those of you who are now in the Congress know of the great work of his mother, FRANCES BOLTON; her great patriotism, her great philanthropy. We also know of what OLIVER BOLTON himself has done. His fine war record and his independence here. I am not going to say "Farewell," Oliver, to you, because you will be back and give us advice, I know. You have not spared yourself since you were ill; you have never thought of yourself. Good luck to you, Oliver, and your family.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LECOMPTE].

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it has been my privilege to serve with OLIVER BOLTON'S father, a very distinguished and very useful legislator and a very lovable character. All of us know of the distinguished service of his very charming, gracious, and capable mother.

OLIVER BOLTON, to me, is one of the very distinguished and very useful young Members of Congress. I think I have not seen a man of his age so devoted to duty as he has been in his 4 years in Congress. He is going to be missed. I hope, and I believe, that his retirement from Congress will be the opening of a career of even greater usefulness.

We will miss you, Ollie.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, I could not let this occasion go by without adding my words to those that have been uttered here this evening as a farewell tribute to OLLIE BOLTON. He and I came to Congress at the same time. We have been rather closely associated since that time in January of 1953. And the longer I have known him, the greater has my admiration become for him. And tonight I say, as he bids us farewell, that I could not love him more if he were my brother.

Throughout all the days and the years that are ahead, Ollie, I sincerely wish for you not only good health but all of the happiness and joy that you deserve.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join all those who have paid tribute to OLIVER BOLTON and endorse everything that has been said. I well recall when he first came to Congress and I met him, I knew at once he was a likable, lovable individual; but it was not long thereafter that I discovered he was a young man of tremendous ability, courage and patriotism. It has been a real joy and a pleasure to have served with him. I wish him well in all that he does and regret that he is leaving us.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARVEY].

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with Oliver's very many friends in saying that having known you, Ollie, has made my own service in the Congress more worth while and certainly much more pleasant. I wish you Godspeed and know that as you have greater opportunities, you will measure up to them. Your State and our Nation will be a far better place in which to live because of you.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH].

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, the entire Ohio delegation is sorry, indeed, that OLLIE BOLTON has decided to retire to private life. Of course, we from Ohio know the great service that the Bolton family, father, mother, and son, and brothers, has given to the State of Ohio and to their Nation. We know that even though Ollie is leaving the House of Representatives he will carry on the fine tradition of that fine family, that he will be serving his county, his State, and his Nation, wherever he may be, whatever he may be doing so long as he lieves.

We want him to come back, often.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH].

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the friends of OLLIE BOLTON and wish him Godspeed in his new endeavors. As a committee colleague, I have had the opoprtunity to be closely associated with him and to observe his ability. I regret that he decided to retire from Congress, because I think he had a promising career here. He has always exhibited intelligence and an alert devotion to duty to all matters that came before the committee. I am sure that he will be a success in whatever he attempts to do after he leaves the Congress.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BEAMER].

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to join my friends and the friends of OLIVER BOLTON in saying to him that we wish him Godspeed. I am sure God will be good to him and give him good health, success, and prosperity in whatever endeavors he engages in in his life.

Tonight we are reminded a bit of an adage in the Bible that says:

Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful in the few things. I shall see that you will be master of many.

We predict many good things of OLIVER BOLTON in the days to come.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW].

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the fine service that has been rendered to this House by OLIVER BOLTON. It is nothing new for the State of Ohio to have fine representation from the Bolton family. OLIVER'S father, Chester Bolton, was one of the great Congressmen from the State of Ohio. History will write the service that Chester Bolton has rendered to our State. The mother, FRANCES BOLTON, is outstanding in her service in this House. It has been grand to have the son of those two great servants of the public serve here with us during the last two terms. I am delighted to have this opportunity to join with my colleagues in a great tribute to a fine statesman, a fine friend, and a great Ohioan, OLIVER BOLTON.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I join in these remarks about OLIVER BOLTON. In my district, the 6th District of Florida, the Boltons hold a very full spot in our affection, for their family has lived there many years during the winter months. In the short time I have served here in the House I have come to know and respect OLIVER BOLTON as I had already known and my father had known before me his wonderful mother. I want to wish Oliver the best in all the years to come. We are going to expect to see a great deal of him in Florida.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. McINTIRE].

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to join with the friends of OLLIE BOLTON in this tribute to him in recognition of his outstanding service in this Congress. We in Maine are proud that in his heritage there are some of the traditions of Maine. At this time, Ollie, may I bring you the warmest wishes of the Maine delegation that your future years will be rich in reward and in the health and happiness which you so well deserve.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON].

Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to serve one's country. It is even a greater privilege to serve one's country in the Congress of the United States. To leave it is exceedingly difficult, but in leaving may I say to each of my colleagues, my thanks to you for your friendliness, your cooperation, your help, and above all, as a citizen as well as your colleague, for your patriotism. May God be on your side in the work in this House in the future. Thank you again.

Mr. MINSHALL. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to extend their remarks in the RECORD with regard to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. I am sure that the House will understand when I say that I hesitated to agree to speak during these moments when a few Members expect to say a few words about the retiring Congressman from the 11th District of Ohio. As I thought it over and realized that this is a very unique moment in the entire history of the House of Representatives, I felt impelled to do so.

The first chapter began in Cleveland when my youngest stopped at my house on his way home one evening, whistled a family whistle which brought me to the door and with a broad smile said—"I just thought you would want to know I am running for Congress." With the same independence he wrote me—in November—I was in Africa—that he had decided to resign from the Congress.

It has been an interesting experience for us both. Few, if any, mothers have had the opportunity to become colleagues of their sons. Perhaps no mother in our Western World has had such an experience. Few if any sons have had the fun of finding in "Mother" an objective, constructive, hard-working colleague.

These have been fascinating years to us both—our lives will always be enriched by them—I am exceedingly happy to join with others in saying to my distinguished colleague from the 11th Ohio District that it has been a joy to serve with him, to share the stimulating challenge of his consecrated service here, and with the rest of you, I wish him well in the many years that lie ahead. That he will use his intelligence, his energy and his intense desire to see this great country of ours true to her traditions of freedom wherever he may serve, no one who knows him could doubt. I trust that he takes with him a deep sense of satisfaction in the work he has been able to do. He knows that he has won his spurs in perhaps the hardest school there is. He has been tried and not found wanting. Mr. Speaker, it is a great joy to me to share in these moments and to add my congratulations to the Congressman from Ohio's 11th District for the work he has done here and to wish him Godspeed in all he will do in the future.

Mr. BAUMHART. Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed emotions that I join my colleagues in paying warm and deserved tribute to Congressman OLIVER BOLTON, whom I am proud to call one of my closest friends.

Regrettably, this is the last House session in which Oliver will participate, and we will sorely miss him both as a devoted friend and as an able legislator. Yet at the same time we can rejoice with him in the knowledge that he leaves the House by his own choice—for out of consideration for his personal health and for the security of his family, he has chosen to restrict his energies and talents to managing his varied personal business interests.

I have long known of the high regard in which Oliver has been held not only by his constituency in the 11th Ohio District, but also by the people of the entire State of Ohio, regardless of their political affiliations.

Having served at his side in Congress these past 2 years, I have observed, too, the respect he has earned for himself from both sides of the aisle, by virtue of his dedicated and unselfish service to the Nation. He has indeed brought added luster to his family name, which has for so long been associated with the finest in public service.

OLIVER BOLTON leaves the Congress with an established record of concrete achievement, at an age when many men are just beginning to aspire to a House seat. The Nation has profited immeasurably from his participation in this great legislative body these past 4 years, and can justifiably subscribe to our sentiments today as we, his colleagues and sternest judges, say to him in all sincerity, "Well done, Ollie."

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, in these closing hours of another session of this great Congress of the United States I rise to express my regrets that for so many of our colleagues this year marks the end of their service in this body.

It is a matter of particular regret to me that one of our finest young Members, OLLIE BOLTON, is among those voluntarily retiring from the House.

Let me hasten to add, however, that I appreciate his reasons and respect his decision.

I well remember the first meetings I had with the group of freshmen Congressmen on this side of the aisle shortly after the 83d Congress convened.

They were an enthusiastic group, eager to get on with a Republican program so that the 83d Congress, working with President Eisenhower, could fashion needed legislation for the well-being of the country.

No Member of that freshman group took his responsibilities more seriously than OLLIE BOLTON.

No Member proved himself more worthy of the trust that the people of his district had placed in him.

And I say these things as one who knows, having served as the majority leader in that Congress.

In his departure we are losing a fine young colleague and his constituents are losing an excellent public servant.

I understand that Ollie plans to resume his career in journalism and I know that as a newspaper publisher he will continue to serve the public ably and conscientiously.

For my part I am most sorry to see him go, but I wish him Godspeed, success, and a full measure of happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the tribute to my good friend, OLLIE BOLTON.

He comes of good stock. I served with his father, Hon. Chester Bolton, in the Ohio senate and here in Congress. He was one of the finest men I ever knew. I have served with his mother, our colleague, on the Foreign Affairs Committee, for 17 years. She is a great woman. He has two fine brothers whom I know well, Charlie and Ken.

OLLIE BOLTON has added luster to the family name. After a fine record in World War II, and a career in business, he has made an outstanding record in his too few years here in Congress. His service has been characterized by industry, courage, and commensense. His retirement at this time in his career is a great loss to his district, our State, the Nation.

But he is still a young man.

Sometimes in a football game a star back goes out early in the game, only to return later to carry the ball in the last half.

I wish our colleague well in his retirement. I am comforted by the feeling that he will be back in the game later.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, on the last day of the session one is especially aware of the value of friends—and the importance of friends. In the case of those retiring from Congress, as is OLIVER BOLTON, we realize all the more how much their friendship has meant to us all.

In the two terms in which he has served his district and his country with distinction, Ollie has been a devoted public servant—and a real friend. He has been blessed with many talents. We have all benefited from his unfailing good judgment, his understanding of the many problems which we all face, and from his ever-present—and invaluable—sense of humor. He has always been conscientious in discharging his responsibilities and yet he has never let his tireless energy interfere with his real interest in his friends and associates. Although he is retiring, I am confident he will continue to be actively engaged in worthwhile activities. On both sides of the aisle, I am sure, we wish him all kinds of happiness and good fortune.

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, on this closing day of the 84th Congress, I am moved to extend my remarks in tribute to my distinguished colleague from Ohio, Mr. OLIVER P. BOLTON, who for reasons of his own has decided not to seek reelection to Congress.

Even though I am a freshman in Congress and have only known OLLIE BOLTON 1½ years, I have developed a friendship with him which I shall value, and a high regard and respect for him. The Congress is losing a good man, a fine legislator who has an excellent record, and I hope since he is still young and has a great future before him that he may some time return to Congress.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that my colleague from Ohio, the Honorable OLIVER P. BOLTON, is voluntarily retiring from Congress. We need young men such as OLLIE BOLTON in our legislative halls. He is a hard worker, honest and has most capably represented his district during the period he has been in Washington. Although he has only been with us a short time, he has made an excellent record and has many accomplishments.

Mrs. McGregor joins me in extending to him and his family best wishes in whatever their endeavors might be.

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to concur with my colleagues in all the nice things they have said about OLIVER BOLTON. I had the privilege of serving with him on the Banking and Currency Committee, where he made a distinct contribution. He was always alert to the many problems which we considered in that committee.

Ollie was an able Congressman. He always seemed to be keenly interested in everything about him and exhibited his interest with a personality that made him a host of friends.

I sincerely regret that he is leaving Congress and wish him the best of luck.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, as a Clevelander and as a longtime friend of the Honorable OLIVER P. BOLTON, of the 11th District of Ohio, I regret his decision to retire from the Congress of the United States. As fellow members of the Banking and Currency Committee, we had a splendid opportunity to work with one another on the complexing legislative problems which have come before our committee. OLLIE was always on the job with clear, incisive questions relating to pending legislation. He was always cheerful and pleasant, never indicating the great problems which he faced as Congressman from the 11th District of Ohio. Although I am of a different political faith and philosophy, there were always great areas of agreement in our thinking.

OLLIE BOLTON has made a great contribution in his work as a Representative of his people. It is my hope that his withdrawal from public life is only temporary. Government will always need people like the Honorable OLIVER P. BOLTON.

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to concur with my other colleagues in paying high tribute to OLIVER P. BOLTON, who does not seek reelection to the Congress. He has been an aggressive, fine legislator, and has served his constituents faithfully and well.

When the 19th District of Ohio was redistricted OLIVER BOLTON took over part of Trumbull and all of Ashtabula County, which I had formerly represented. He fully demonstrated his willingness to lend assistance in every possible manner.

It is my fervent prayer that his health will continue to improve and that he will find relaxation, success, and happiness in whatever field of endeavor he might choose.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that my good friend and colleague, OLLIE BOLTON, is not seeking reelection. We all hope the best of everything for him and look forward to the day when he will return to public life.

Speaking as one whose district adjoins his, I am confident I express the feeling of his constituents when I say, "You did a good job, OLLIE; we appreciate your efforts in our behalf."

We can all be thankful, however, that the Honorable FRANCES P. BOLTON is still with us. Congress without a Bolton would be like a carriage without a horse. The contributions this family has made to America will never be forgotten.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I speak of the retirement of my good friend, Congressman OLIVER BOLTON, of Ohio, from Congress at the close of the current session.

OLLIE and I have been close personal acquaintances since we both came to Washington as freshman Congressmen in January of 1953. Our contacts were both on and off Capitol Hill and were uniformly pleasant and interesting. They were strengthened by the fact that we were both members of the same group of young Republican Congressmen who met weekly to consider and discuss problems of mutual legislative interest.

Congressman BOLTON was one of the most conscientious workers on Capitol Hill. His close attention to the many problems of his district and the long hours he cheerfully contributed to their solution undoubtedly helped to bring about his untimely illness last year from which we are all so grateful that he has recovered so splendidly. I should also say that, in addition to the duties of his constituency, his obligations arising from membership on two of the most important House committees were also fully complied with.

It is the hope of many of us that OLLIE BOLTON will be able, in the near future, to reenter public service. I know of no one in Congress of our age group that is more fully qualified for such a career. I join with his many friends on Capitol Hill in sorrow at his departure but in confidence that our good wishes go with him and that he will have a long and successful life, no matter in what direction he turns his talents.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, OLIVER P. BOLTON, is retiring from Congress, but he will never lose the warm friendships which he has made during the two terms he has served the people of the 11th District of Ohio. OLLIE is my personal friend, and it has been a pleasure to serve with him.

Mr. BOLTON comes from a distinguished family of public-spirited citizens. His father served in the House before him. His mother has ably represented the people of the 22d District of Ohio for the past 16 years. OLIVER P. BOLTON has made his mark in the Halls of Congress, and in every sense he measures up to the standards of performance set for him by a famous mother and father.

Few men who have served in the House of Representatives the brief period of 4 years have enjoyed the great popularity, and have won in such a short period of time the profound respect of their colleagues. Mr. BOLTON is a man of irreproachable integrity. By his keen and sympathetic understanding of the many problems which come to a Representative he has diligently and zealously served his constituency.

Nature endowed OLLIE BOLTON with a warm personality which has won him countless friends, and he has kept those friends by being steadfast. I wish him good health and good fortune in the future.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in paying tribute to my good friend and colleague, Hon. OLIVER BOLTON. OLLIE and I came to Congress at the same time and during the past 4 years, I have enjoyed his friendship and association. He has won for himself not only the respect of his colleagues, but a splendid reputation for intellectual capacity and courage. He will always be an inspiration and challenge to those of us who have known him and worked with him and we will remember him for the example of devotion to his constituency and his country which he has set.

I concur in the opinions expressed here tonight, that although OLLIE BOLTON is leaving the Halls of Congress, we will be hearing from him in the future. He has my sincere good wishes for future happiness and all of life's blessings.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, one of my good friends and colleagues has voluntarily decided to withdraw from public life. This would be tragic if I did not believe that the withdrawal is temporary. OLLIE BOLTON has too much dynamic energy, too much to offer, to place himself out of political circulation. It is all too rare on the American scene that someone like Ollie devotes this energy to service in behalf of the people.

His work in Washington will long be remembered. He has followed in the footsteps of already illustrious predecessors bearing the Bolton name. What more can be said than "Godspeed and hurry back."

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, the announcement by OLLIE BOLTON that he will not seek reelection and that he plans to retire at the end of this term removes from the Ohio delegation a very able and conscientious Member of Congress.

It was my privilege to know his distinguished father, Hon. Chester Bolton, who served in Congress for five terms more than 20 years ago. OLLIE is a worthy son of a great father and has brought additional fame and luster to an outstanding Ohio Republican family. His mother, Mrs. FRANCES BOLTON, has been a Member of Congress since 1940.

As OLLIE BOLTON returns to his business interest in Ohio, I wish him abounding good health and much happiness.

FAREWELL TO RETIRING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to yield to two of my colleagues. I yield at this time to the gentleman from New York, a man that we on this side of the aisle have had the pleasure of serving with a long time. We admire his zeal, his industry, and the way he fights for the things he believes in.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the courtesy of the gentleman from California and I appreciate what he said about me. However, I do not intend to talk about myself or my own interests at this time, or politics.

I want to say a word of appreciation of the service for over 20 years of RALPH GAMBLE of New York in the Congress. He has been one of my closest friends here. He has been on the Committee on Banking and Currency almost all that time and has done a remarkable job there. He is leaving and I hope in his retirement he will be able to enjoy life for a long time to come. I certainly wish him my best and the best of everything.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to express genuine regret in bidding farewell to our distinguished friend from New York who has served with us in the House for so many years. His service here has been approximately the same length of time as mine. During that time I have come to recognize his fine qualities, his great patriotism, his loyalty and his conscientious efforts for the good of his people and for the good of his country. I am extremely sorry to know that he will no longer be with us. But in giving expression to that regret, I can also express the hope for him that there will be many years of good health and happiness for him to enjoy.

Mr. TABER. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I also regret to see RALPH GAMBLE leave the Congress. I have served with him on the Committee on Banking and Currency all the time that I have been there and I am sure he has made a great contribution to the economy of this country in the service that he has rendered over the years on that great committee. We hope he will enjoy many, many years of health and happiness, and we regret to see him leave the halls of Congress, after having served with us so many years.

Mr. TABER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to concur with my great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that RALPH GAMBLE was one of the greatest members of the New York State Legislature, and because of the record he made up there, he was sent down here to Washington. Those of us who have been his close friends here and in Albany regret that he is leaving the Capitol and leaving this House. We all say to him we have not only appreciated his friendship and our association with him, but the record he leaves behind he can keep in his mind for many, many years to come. I join with all of you in hoping that Ralph has many years of good health and happiness.

Mr. TABER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleagues, and the delegation from the State of New York, especially to pay tribute to the senior Congressman from Westchester County. That is one-half of Westchester County he represents, the other I represent. When I came here he did his best to see that I voted right, which meant voting with him so that the newspapers back home would think that we were two statesmen who saw alike. All through this time I have had the joy of that companionship.

I would like to tell the Members that RALPH GAMBLE comes from a line of distinguished public servants. His father was a Member of this House for two terms and a member of the Senate for two terms from South Dakota. His uncle was also a Member of this House before his father. So he has lived up to the tradition and I hope and expect that the Gambles coming after him will carry on. I know that we can all look forward to the association with Ralph back in Westchester where he came from, and we look forward to his long and useful service there. May he have a long life and God bless his efforts.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HIESTAND].

Mr. HIESTAND. I would like very much to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to RALPH GAMBLE. It was my privilege to serve with him on the Committee on Banking and Currency. I found him to be a man high in principles, high in ideals, outspoken in his convictions. He was a tower of strength.

I wish for him the very very best from here on. I regret that he is leaving the Congress.

Mr. TABER. I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] for his graciousness in yielding to me.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to yield 10 minutes to a man on the Government Operations Committee with whom I have served for 10 years. This man is in my opinion one of the most remarkable men in the United States Congress. The zeal with which he tackles the problem at hand is remarkable.

He is 4 or 5 years older than I, but I can say that he is as hard a fighter as any man in the House, and although we have been on this committee for 10 years our personal relationship has been very friendly.

I follow him on the rollcall. My name is called after his. I can say that politically this is about the only place that I follow him.

But at this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, the Honorable CLARE HOFFMAN.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the tribute paid by the good friend from California certainly is welcome, because in the years gone by I have heard sentiments of another kind—not all the time, but very frequently.

This seems to be the day to bid farewell to our comrades—I guess I better strike that—colleagues who are not being "liquidated" at the polls, but who are retiring voluntarily.

It is no more than right that something should be said about the service which has been rendered by two men from Michigan: I refer to our colleague, JESSE WOLCOTT, and our colleague, GEORGE DONDERO. Jesse has served here for some 26 years, George for 24. It is not necessary for Members on either side of the House to pay tribute to either of these gentlemen.

Jesse served in World War I. George has been fighting the battle for his people and home I think from the day he was born—at least from the day he was weaned; I will not go back farther than that, and they both rendered distinguished service in Michigan before they came here. Each one of them has a mind of his own.

George especially is an authority on Lincoln, and I have noticed that whenever Members of the House had an opportunity to speak to some large group, some great celebration where Lincoln was the topic, more than once instead of saying something of their own have called upon GEORGE DONDERO. And George has several very remarkable, instructive, very entertaining talks on the subject. So I bespeak for you any time you have occasion to make a talk on Lincoln, get George to do it for you rather than do it yourself.

We will miss these colleagues.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I want to say that the second year I came here, 1944, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] took the well of the House and gave a lecture on the deportment of Members while in the Chamber. I have never forgotten the speech he made, because he told us many of the little things we were inclined to do unthinkingly: Glancing at newspapers, putting our feet on the back of the seat ahead of us, and other little things about which we sometimes become careless and do, not realizing that American citizens in the gallery are looking down upon us—I am speaking now from the standpoint of height—looking down on us and judging us by our actions and our postures and our speech. I have always been grateful for that speech the gentleman made, and while I probably violated some of the principles which he enunciated, I usually found myself thinking about it and tried to correct myself on the floor of the House.

In leaving the House of Representatives I wish for both gentlemen from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. DONDERO] that the remainder of their lives will be spent in the happiest fashion.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt but what many of us have learned a great deal from the lecture to which the gentleman from California referred to, and things that we needed to learn. I have not been able to religiously follow the advice, however, that he gave me. Sometimes it took us back to our schoolboy days. When we saw George coming we took our foot off the desk, or if we were slouching or talking, we just quit, because we knew what was coming. In that respect he has rendered a wonderful service to the House in presenting the House to the people as a dignified body, or something along that line.

As I stated before, we in Michigan and we of the Michigan delegation do not deem it necessary to eulogize each one of these gentlemen. Both have served as chairman of regular House committees, both have been faithful, loyal, and industrious. Michigan is going to lose two valuable members. They will be missed in the State, and they will be missed here, and no matter what the ability or the industry of their successes may be.

Mr. McVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McVEY. Mr. Speaker, I fully realize it is not necessary for us to pay any personal tribute to men as prominent in this House of Representatives as are Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. DONDERO, but I would not want to let this moment pass without paying my own personal tribute to these two men.

I have served on the Committee on Banking and Currency with Mr. WOLCOTT for the last 4 years. During that time I have learned to respect very highly his intellectual capacity, his forthrightness, and his desire to do things in the right way.

I, too, have every respect for Mr. DONDERO.

I am sure we are going to lose two very able Members in their retirement.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE. It has always been my feeling that second only to the personal satisfaction an individual has, the opportunity of rendering service to the public by membership in this body or the main reward or gift that a Member has, is the opportunity of serving with and being associated with persons of great character, great talent, great integrity and great patriotism. I can think of no two other persons who are greater, in my estimation, during my years of service than JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO. Both of them are gentlemen of the first order, both of them great legislators and effective legislators, both of them intensely patriotic citizens and both of them true servants of the public and genuine personal friends.

I deeply regret their leaving.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the services of these gentlemen.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to our distinguished Speaker, Mr. RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, we had a doctor in my district one time who made a speech and he said "Fishing is my platform." I have gone fishing with our dear colleague, Mr. WOLCOTT, several times. He started out calling me a sissy fisherman, but after we caught a lot of fish, he had the little ones and I had the big ones, he stopped calling me a sissy fisherman. I think JESSE WOLCOTT is one of the ablest men that I have served with in the House of Representatives, and I have served with more than 3,000 men and women. I regret very much to see him go. And then along comes GEORGE DONDERO and others, and I am just wondering how the Republican side is going to look in the 85th Congress with their ability gone, or most of it. But, I do regret the leaving of JESSE WOLCOTT, who is my dear and devoted friend, and I am his. GEORGE DONDERO is a gentleman who knows as much about the rules as anybody that I know of in the House of Representatives, because very few people know much about the rules except the Parliamentarian of the House. Uncle Joe Cannon sat up there one time and somebody asked him a parliamentary inquiry. Asher Hinds was then the great Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives, and Uncle Joe says "Asher says so and so," and that was it. There are very few good parliamentarians in the world, and I know of only one great one in the House of Representatives, and that is Lew Deschler. But, I could not let this moment pass without paying my respects and my affectionate regards to GEORGE DONDERO and JESSE WOLCOTT.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to like to join in this tribute to these two fine Congressmen who are retiring this year. It has been my privilege to be associated with JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO for over a quarter of a century. I know the tremendous loss that this means not only to the Republican Party but to the Congress and to the country. It is going to be a big loss as they are splendid men, men of great knowledge and served with distinction and ability. Their service to the country could never be calculated. JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO were two great chairmen when I was Speaker and we never had to worry about the legislation that came out of their committees. In their leaving I have lost two stout and loyal friends.

May I also say a farewell word to CLIFF HOPE, a great authority on agriculture. He was without a doubt the best informed man I have ever known here on agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I wish also to say a word of regret at the departure of RALPH GAMBLE. He is another old-time Member of this House who served with fidelity and patriotism, and it is a great regret to see him go, as well as the young gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON]. The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], is another great loss, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KING], who is retiring. He was a fine, patriotic Congressman.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield further to Mr. RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. While I was on my feet I did not know that they had talked about that fine gentleman from New York [Mr. RALPH GAMBLE]. I never knew a finer man or a greater gentleman or an abler legislator than RALPH GAMBLE. I regret that he will not be here with us any more. I wish him Godspeed, and God bless him.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, it has been my pleasure to sit beside JESSE WOLCOTT on the Committee on Banking and Currency for a good many years, and anyone who has been closely associated with him could not help but have great admiration for him as a man and for his intellect. He has been an able, a conscientious and a great statesman.

Of course, I can look with indifference on the great loss which I know the Republican Party has sustained, but I do feel a sense of great loss at his going. I look upon him as a friend. There is no doubt that he has rendered a great service to his Nation and to the people of his State. Wherever he goes, I hope good luck will attend him and that honors await him which he greatly deserves.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I speak not as a partisan when I say that I have never heard Democrats praise Republicans so much in my life as they are being praised here today. I want to say that all of the great men who have been praised on the left side of the aisle are friends of mine, and I have enjoyed their friendship through the years.

JESSE WOLCOTT is a big man in every sense of the word. He is one man who I am sure is worth his weight in gold to the people of this Nation. I am sure that all of us value his friendship.

I can say the same for my friend, GEORGE DONDERO, whose friendship I have enjoyed and whose friendliness is known to all of us. We sustain a great loss when they leave this House. I know that at this hour of the day you do not want to hear a speech and I am not attempting to make a speech. But when I even think of making a speech I am reminded of the time when they were having a hanging down in Tennessee. The platform had been erected, the scaffold was there, the rope was ready, and the sheriff of the county turned to the man and said to him, "Under the laws of the great State of Tennessee it now becomes my duty to advise you that you have the right to make a speech for 10 minutes and say anything you want to say." A great multitude had assembled for the execution. The condemned man told the sheriff that he did not desire to make a speech. Out in the audience there happened to be a candidate for Congress. He said, "Sheriff, if the gentleman does not care to use his time, I will be glad to make a speech myself." Whereupon the sheriff asked the condemned man if he had any objection. He said, "No, I don't have any objection, but I have one request." And the sheriff said, "What is that?" and the man said, "Hang me before the man starts talking."

I know you do not want to hear a speech, but I cannot let this opportunity pass without saying that I do regret that these able and distinguished statesmen and parliamentarians on my left are leaving this Chamber. Likewise I regret to see two of my beloved friends from North Carolina leaving the service of their country, Mr. WOODROW WILSON JONES and Mr. ERTEL CARLYLE. Both are brilliant lawyers. They have served in this House magnificently. I do not know anyone who has more diligently applied himself and more faithfully discharged the duties of his office than WOODROW WILSON JONES and ERTEL CARLYLE.

WOODROW WILSON JONES is voluntarily leaving the service to go back to the practice of his profession. I am sure he will be even more successful in the years ahead than he was before he came here. Mr. ERTEL CARLYLE is a close personal friend and a college fraternity mate of mine.

He, too, is going back to the practice of law, and he, too, is a brilliant lawyer.

I think that our Nation can ill afford to lose the really true statesmanship that we are now losing, because in the days ahead I believe our Nation should have the best and the most brilliant representation from every district in this great country that can possibly be provided. I know that North Carolina is sustaining a loss when ERTEL CARLYLE and WOODROW JONES walk out of this Chamber tonight. I wish them Godspeed and assure them of my friendship and high esteem. I shall look forward to seeing them frequently in the days ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members desiring to do so may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I want to sincerely associate myself with the dean of my delegation, Mr. COOLEY, in expressing my admiration and respect for ERTEL CARLYLE and WOODROW JONES, who are this evening answering their last rollcalls. They will take with them not only my best wishes but I bespeak for them both and their families every choice blessing.

Mr. SIEMINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see our friends and colleagues take leave of the Congress. They are able men, warm friends, and great Americans.

Their departure brings out to me for the first time in my 6 years in this House an interesting point on the way we work. Perhaps it is because of the design of the Chamber.

The shape of this Chamber underscores the sentiment of Benjamin Franklin. He held that it is for us here to consult and not to contend. We contend at the polls. The people judge the issues and the men and vote their convictions.

The shape of this Chamber is a semicircle. We sit in rows that follow from one end of the Chamber to the other. We face the man who addresses us. We do not face each other as do members in the House of Commons in England. We are indeed different.

Our semicircle forms 180°. This means that on any vote, the people of the United States who sit, symbolically, in the other 180° of the circle, hold, by their vote, the final say on what we do here every 2, 4, and 6 years. Every 2 years the people vote their sentiments on the Members of the House. Every 4 years they vote their sentiments on the President. Every 6 years, a Senator stands for approval or disapproval by his State.

This makes our people sovereign. By their right to vote they hold the power over the Congress and the Executive, who in turn appoints members to the Supreme Court for life.

Thus, we in this House are on a stage. The citizens of the United States are in the audience. We, by our votes, indicate. The audience, by returning us or rejecting us, adjudicate. The word of the people is final every 2, 4, and 6 years. Americans are great sports. They are great referees. They call them as they see them every 2, 4, and 6 years.

That is why they want the issues rolled out full and fair; and the men behind the issues do that, as our colleagues who take leave today, have done that with all their hearts. We shall miss them.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think that the above observations disclose why it would be so very, very difficult, almost impossible, would it not, to overthrow our Government by force and violence?

For to overthrow our form of government by force and violence would mean that our people, each voter, would, in effect, have to be destroyed.

Each of us in the Congress is replaceable. If one of us falls, hundreds stand ready, nay thousands stand ready to take our place. Recent shooting in the House Chamber brought that out. We could, each of us, have been wiped out. We would have been replaced in short order had we been killed.

Ingrained in the American tradition is the admonition of our forefathers, those 56 gallant giants who signed the Declaration of Independence; in effect, this great American tradition says: "Speak for yourself. Stand on your own feet. Vote your convictions. Fight for your life and your country if you must; but fight."

Our departing colleagues have fought the good fight. Godspeed to them and their families, gallant Americans. Goodby all.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, permit me to join with my colleagues in paying a brief but sincere tribute to several of our colleagues and friends of several years' service together in the House. Those of our colleagues who are retiring from and leaving the Congress.

I especially want to mention my friend CHARLIE DEANE, whom we have all grown to admire and respect for his true Christian character and genuine worth. He will be missed but we all, I know, wish for him much happiness and every future success.

My high regard and admiration and affection is also extended to our colleagues F. E. CARLYLE, WOODROW W. JONES, and THURMOND CHATHAM, of North Carolina, and also our friend, Congressman BRADY GENTRY, a genteel Texan.

On the other side of the isle, I extend my best wishes to my friend, Congressman JOHN PHILLIPS, of California. It has been my fine privilege to be able to serve JOHN PHILLIPS on the Independent Offices Appropriation subcommittee. There is no more persuasive and able legislator than JOHN PHILLIPS. He will be missed and I know we all wish for him good health and happiness in his retirement.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend best wishes to Michigan's distinguished senior Congressman, GEORGE DONDERO, who is also retiring. Mr. DONDERO is known as "Mr. Gentleman" of the House, in deportment, but in battle he is a relentless foe—in any battle. He is a champion of the St. Lawrence Seaway project for which he fought diligently and contributed much in a legislative way to make it a reality.

We shall miss our friend Congressman DONDERO as we shall miss all of our other departing colleagues. Their services shall be missed by the Nation. I wish them all good fortune, good health, and unalloyed happiness.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there is no other word in the English language more difficult for me to say than "farewell" to a departing friend. But divine providence in infinite wisdom has rightly decreed that all things must come to pass and so it is that the day often arrives when close and intimate friends must bid each other adieu. That day has now come upon us in this House and it is therefore with a feeling of genuine sadness that I turn to bid my dear friend, ERTEL CARLYLE, goodby. I have known many men in my lifetime and I have observed them under difficult and trying situations. But without doubt I have never known a man who could face sunshine and shadow like ERTEL CARLYLE and yet remain constant.

Mr. Speaker, ERTEL CARLYLE is one of those rare persons we meet in life's journey who by sheer force of character and goodness of soul endears himself to all men. I have never heard anyone say an unkind word about his character or ability. What greater tribute can we say about any man? Regardless of the time, the place, or the circumstance, Ertel has always carried a smile upon his lips and a word of encouragement for his friends. During his tenure in the Congress, Ertel has been faithful to duty and friend alike and I know I voice the sentiments of all who have been privileged to know and serve with him when I say that he will be sorely missed in this body. He has labored long and hard for the welfare of his constituents and he has ever been faithful to the responsibilities of his high office.

My life has been enriched and blessed by knowing ERTEL CARLYLE. I shall miss him in the days to come but I shall never forget him. In future days our paths will surely cross and I will indeed rejoice in greeting my friend.

God be with you until we meet again.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, when the gavel falls to indicate sine die adjournment of the 84th Congress, it will bring to a close the distinguished congressional career of my friend, ERTEL CARLYLE. Ertel will take back with him to Lumberton, N. C., all of the satisfactions that flow from outstanding public service.

It has been a great privilege to have had the opportunity to serve here with ERTEL CARLYLE during the last 4 years. I have been greatly impressed by his conscientious devotion to duty and by the able manner in which he has discharged the responsibilities of his high office. He has earned the confidence, respect, and esteem of his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Ertel served with distinction on one of the most important committees of the House, the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and much important legislation came out of that committee. Due to the tremendous growth of Government in the last quarter century, Members of Congress cannot possibly keep abreast of all of the activities of the various committees and we must of necessity rely upon those who serve on committees other than our own. Frequently I have gone to Ertel for advice on matters pending before his committee and on legislation cleared by his committee for House action. He always responded freely and generously and I could count on any advice from him being sound and sincere.

In the retirement of ERTEL CARLYLE, the country is losing the service of a dedicated public servant, a man of outstanding ability, and one who has demonstrated by his service in the House a profound devotion to country, State, and district. As he ends his distinguished career in this body, he will take with him the affectionate regard of all of his colleagues and our best wishes for a long life filled with health and a full measure of joy and happiness.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to join the other Members of the House of Representatives in congratulating my good friend, ERTEL CARLYLE, on the fine service he has rendered the people of North Carolina and the United States during his 10 years as a Member of this body.

Congressman CARLYLE'S district joins mine for approximately 100 miles and we have worked on numerous mutual problems with complete unity during the past 10 years. I can remember very distinctly the tremendous efforts Congressman CARLYLE made in behalf of the people of North Carolina in having the United States engineers approve the Waccamaw River drainage project which traverses the lower part of his district and completely crosses my district. I feel that Congressman CARLYLE'S services in this instance were worth more to the people of North Carolina than the entire salary he received for the 10 years he has been a Member of this House.

Congressman CARLYLE is a hard-working, Christian gentleman, and is one of the finest lawyers in the Congress. I will greatly miss him as a friend and a coworker during the next Congress. His services will be greatly missed by every Member of the House as he joined in on numerous occasions in solving problems not only for the Nation but the entire world.

I certainly hope Congressman CARLYLE will completely regain his health and enjoy a lucrative and pleasant law practice during the future years. I am certainly happy to consider Congressman CARLYLE as one of my closest personal friends.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it has been a real pleasure and privilege to have had the opportunity to serve on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with ERTEL CARLYLE, and it is with a sincere feeling of regret that I realize he will leave the House of Representatives at the close of this session of Congress.

ERTEL CARLYLE has been an able and faithful member of the committee. His ability, experience, and sound advice has been unusually helpful in the work of the committee. He will be greatly missed as his assistance has always been most worth while.

At all times, during his membership in the House, he has been most anxious to represent the constituency of his congressional district in a manner that would bring to each of them the greatest possible good. He has always been zealous in promoting their welfare and all that pertained to their well-being.

Not only has the service of ERTEL CARLYLE been of an outstanding and challenging character, but he has shown at all times a spirit of friendliness to his fellow Members that has endeared him to all, both Democrats and Republicans. It is our hope that the days and years ahead will be filled with health, happiness, and success for him.

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, North Carolina has lost a most able legislator and lawyer from their congressional delegation in the person of the Honorable F. ERTEL CARLYLE.

It was my pleasure to serve with this gentleman in this legislative body for the past 10 years during which time he more than once demonstrated his ability in legislative matters. The service which he has rendered to not only the people of the Seventh District of North Carolina, but to the people of the United States, is a matter of record.

I sincerely wish that he will enjoy a most lucrative law practice during his coming years and hope that some day he will once again serve with us here in the Congress.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO have inspired me during my 10 years of service to constantly seek to improve my craftsmanship as a Member of this House. I am grateful for their long and faithful service. They know of my personal interest in their great State. I do not know when we will meet again. It comes to me to suggest that perhaps it might be on Mackinac Island. Best wishes Jesse and so long, George.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in paying a just tribute to GEORGE DONDERO, of Michigan, who is retiring after 29 years of faithful and patriotic service in this House.

George served as a member of the special congressional committee which investigated the Katyn Forest massacre. As the Members know we held hearings in this country, in England and Europe. I, as chairman of this committee, had a close association with him and observed firsthand his great ability as a legislator. He was the mainspring and balance wheel on this important committee. His services and ability contributed more than I can review here tonight to the great success of the work of the Katyn Massacre Committee.

I wish to him many years of happiness, good health, and long life.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that with the adjournment of this session of Congress the service of many distinguished Members of this House will close.

I would like to make individual reference to each of them. However, the time afforded permits me to only make reference to a few, those with whom I have been more closely associated with—I refer to the following:

CLIFFORD HOPE

CLIFFORD HOPE, of Kansas, came to membership in the Congress at the same session of the 70th as I did. During these approximately 30 years of service it has been a privilege and a pleasure to have been in close and understanding friendship with him. During all these years he has been uniformly courteous and modest. He has shown a knowledge of agriculture and its needs that has made him an outstanding source of knowledge and wisdom in dealing with the difficult problems that have confronted us throughout all the years he has served in the House. His counsel and advice have been most helpful at all times. We shall miss him and as he leaves us he carries with him our high regard and best wishes for health, happiness, and success.

JESSE WOLCOTT

JESSE WOLCOTT came to the Congress at almost the same time that I did. No Member has ever served in this House who has shown a greater knowledge of the subject of banking, finance, and sound economy and the kindred subjects within the jurisdiction of the Banking and Currency Committee than JESSE WOLCOTT.

His careful and close study of the problems that came before the committee on which he served and the sound recommendations and views he expressed on the floor of the House in debate, commanded the attention of his colleagues at all times. No one was given closer attention when addressing the House than JESSE WOLCOTT. He was a tower of strength and has made a contribution to sound financial stability that has enabled our county to progress upon a safe and sure basis. He goes from this House at the peak of usefulness. Consequently, he will be greatly missed. We have needed men of his character and ability, and will always need such. It will be difficult to fill the place he leaves vacant. Our best wishes follow him wherever his path may lead.

RALPH GAMBLE

RALPH GAMBLE has stood beside JESSE WOLCOTT on the Committee on Banking and Currency and worked hand in glove with him in solving the intricate questions of banking and finance. Quiet and modest at all times, he has served with fidelity and ability. He was always zealous in advocating and supporting principles that make a sound basis for progress in our great country. He never wavered in his adherence to such principles, and, at all times he showed a zealous interest in the work of the important committee on which he served, and attended the sessions of the House with great regularity. We shall miss him as he goes forth from our midst. We wish him well in whatever may claim his interest in the days of retirement. May health, happiness and success be his in large measure.

GEORGE DONDERO

GEORGE DONDERO has in no unmistakable way shown himself to be a gentleman of the old school in every sense of the word—always courteous and polite. Never has he ever said one word that would hurt the feelings of any Member. Always ready and willing to help each and every Member of the House in whatever way he could.

Aside from the ability that GEORGE DONDERO has always shown in the committee on which he served, and on the floor of the House, he has always been a stickler for adherence to the rules of the House and for a decorum that made for dignity in the conduct of the business of the House.

It has also been a rare privilege to have had the opportunity of hearing his stories and interesting incidents in the life of Abraham Lincoln. This was a subject that claimed his constant study and attention, and he was ever ready and willing to give of his knowledge in this respect to his fellow Members.

GEORGE DONDERO will be missed, as he leaves this House, by everyone who has known and been associated with him during the many years he has served as a Member of Congress. In the days ahead it is our wish that his cup of happiness will be brimful and running over.

OLIVER BOLTON

I have not known OLIVER BOLTON as long as I have the others to whom I have referred, but it has been sufficiently long for me to recognize that he is a young man of strong character, sound judgment and great ability and sincerity.

I knew and served in this House with his distinguished father, Chester Bolton, and I have had the pleasure and privilege of serving with his distinguished mother in the work of the Congress, and she is still a Member.

It has been a great distinction for father, mother, and son to serve in the House of Representatives, and particularly for mother and son to serve at the same time.

I regret that OLIVER BOLTON has decided to leave this House at the close of this session. It is my opinion that he would have been one of the leaders of great usefulness in the work of his Nation in this House had he found it possible to continue his service. We wish him well in the days and years ahead. I trust that he may enjoy health, happiness, and success.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I join with many other colleagues to express regret that JESSE WOLCOTT is leaving Congress. He has been an outstanding personality in the years that I have been a Member of this distinguished body. Rarely have I disagreed with his position on matters that came within the jurisdiction of the great Committee on Banking and Currency. Mr. WOLCOTT had the unusual ability to analyze a legislative problem and then to set forth his views in clearly understandable language. There was never any doubt when he completed an argument that the membership of the House understood his position.

His leadership will be missed. The people of the State of Michigan will perhaps miss him more than we do because he was an outstanding legislator. On the other hand, he has today established himself as a national personality by virtue of his grasp of banking and currency problems as they affect the welfare of the Nation. So his departure from this body creates a void not only in the Michigan delegation but truly it is a national loss. Men of his ability and stature are not numerous in public life. He has given of the best years of his life to public service and he has earned a very deserved respite from legislative responsibilities.

JESSE WOLCOTT, Mr. Speaker, also served with honor and valor as a soldier in World War I. It was my privilege to have been a member, along with him, of the first officers training camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill., established in 1917. For 90 days we trained intensively to become second lieutenants in Uncle Sam's Army in a war that was to save the world for democracy. Here, also, JESSE WOLCOTT made an outstanding record as a soldier. So we have in this man a personification of soldier and statesman.

We shall miss you, Jesse, but our prayers and good wishes go with you for continued health and happiness in the days ahead.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have come to know GEORGE DONDERO quite intimately. For the past 4 years it has been my privilege along with other Members of this body to meet in the House Cafeteria at 8 o'clock each morning for breakfast. There we settled many problems of the day. There it was that we contended for certain points of view on certain issues that were about to be considered. There it was in friendly fashion we needled each other about votes cast the previous day on a certain bill.

Mr. Speaker, right now I can see GEORGE DONDERO approaching the breakfast table with his tray of food. His first question to us always was "Well, gentlemen, who is abusing us today?" George was expressing a question that Abraham Lincoln always addressed to his cabinet whenever they met. So I shall always remember that question and the pleasant association with this man, not only at the breakfast table, or around the round table in the House Restaurant but as an outstanding legislator on the floor of this House.

As chairman during the 83d Congress of that great Committee on Public Works, he assumed tremendous responsibilities but he met them without flinching. Many times he was compelled to vote his convictions rather than vote for specific legislation. He was always in the forefront to consider the effects of every bill upon the welfare of our Nation. His has never been a narrow provincial attitude but rather one of broad outline.

Then, too, Mr. Speaker, I shall never forget him as he would go down into the well of the House at least once a year and admonish us regarding the rules of the House, especially as they related to our conduct while on the floor. No man, in my opinion, knew and understood the rules of the House in this regard as well as my dear friend from Michigan. No Member of this House ever took offense at the manner of his "preaching" to us on the rules. He was always dignified, kindly, yet deadly earnest as he pled with us to obey so that the visitors in the gallery would go away with a good impression of the House of Representatives. We confess today, Mr. Speaker, that many of us have failed to follow George but we admit the wisdom of his advice.

Mr. Speaker, GEORGE DONDERO is also an intense patriot. I dare say that no man in this body is more devoted to the ideals which undergirded our great Nation than he. Certainly, no one is better informed about the causes for the great Civil War between the States and the war itself than Mr. DONDERO. He is a national authority on Abraham Lincoln and is greatly sought after as a speaker from many points throughout the Nation.

Shortly after coming to Congress, in 1941, my very good friend drove Mrs. Smith and myself to Gettysburg, where, on a personally conducted tour, he pointed out the interesting historic spots in the great battle of the Civil War, a battle which perhaps turned the tide of victory for the Union forces. Mr. DONDERO is recognized by the guides in Gettysburg as being better informed than they, and they all know him and speak affectionately of his very great knowledge concerning the Gettysburg battlefield. It was a rare opportunity for us to have accompanied him on that trip.

We will miss GEORGE DONDERO in this body. His departure means a personal loss to me, but, more important than that, the great State of Michigan will miss him also, as will the Nation.

I can only wish him Godspeed and a pleasant respite from the arduous duties of a congressional Representative. May God be with him always.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Congress I was assigned to the Subcommittee on Roads. On that subcommittee was a member who is voluntarily retiring from Congress. It did not take us long to recognize the ability, the patience, and the willingness to be of service of JESSE WOLCOTT, the gentleman from Michigan.

Since that time I have really become acquainted with JESSE WOLCOTT and his very fine wife. They are great Americans and certainly their records will go down in history for their many friends to look at with admiration. As Speaker RAYBURN has said, Congressman WOLCOTT, affectionately known as Jesse, has been one of the outstanding lawmakers of this period. His ability has not only been recognized in this Congress but throughout the country.

We will miss JESSE WOLCOTT, Mr. Speaker, but certainly our blessings and good wishes go with him wherever he goes.

Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress adjourns, we realize that many ties will be broken. For many years, Mr. Speaker, I have been closely associated with the Honorable GEORGE DONDERO, of Michigan, who is voluntarily retiring from public office. He has been chairman of the Public Works Committee, of which I am a member. He has been the guiding hand, always being courteous and giving consideration to his fellow men.

Congressman DONDERO is a great American, a gentleman, and a scholar of the highest order. He has completed 50 years of public service. He will be missed in these legislative halls, but I am certain that many will continue to seek his guidance and help in ironing out the difficult problems. To you, GEORGE DONDERO, and your family, we wish the very best of everything.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there have been few men in the Congress who have had a broader grasp of American economics than JESSE WOLCOTT. His service on the Banking and Currency Committee has been brilliant. Not only that, Jesse has a keen sense of humor that has endeared him to everyone who knows him.

We wish Jesse and his wife every success in the years to come. He richly deserves every good to come his way.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House of Representatives in the 78th Congress I became a member of the old Rivers and Harbors Committee, and it was there that my friendship for the gentleman from Michigan, GEORGE DONDERO, first started. I soon learned to respect his sound judgment, his spirit of fair play, and his devotion to this country. He aided me in many ways and gave me much help in the work we were both engaged in.

GEORGE DONDERO'S service in the House has been outstanding and he has always enjoyed the respect and admiration of his colleagues. He is a real gentleman, and, in his courteous way, has tried to teach us all good manners and respect for the traditions of the House of Representatives.

GEORGE DONDERO'S retirement is a loss for us all and the Nation is losing an experienced legislator who is free from bigotry, intense in patriotism, and devoted to the highest standards of statesmanship. May his days to come be filled with God's rich blessings, and I trust that he will find time to return to the Capital from time to time and keep fresh the bonds of affection which his colleagues have for him.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, all of us are proud to have had the privilege of working with GEORGE DONDERO.

Human, kind, thoughtful of others, courteous—George's attributes, coupled with his intelligent approach to the multitude of legislative responsibilities that have come his way, make his service in the Congress one in which we all rejoice.

We wish George and Mrs. Dondero every good in the years to come.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to express one's self about the loss of JESSE WOLCOTT to the House of Representatives. His devotion to the principles of free government and the promotion of the free enterprise system in our economy are outstanding and always command the sincere respect of all who know him. Never a demagog, he approached each problem with a keen mind and real vision, and in simple, sincere language presented his arguments with clarity and persuasion. No one ever had any doubt about the gentleman's views and his position on any subject under discussion.

With it all, JESSE WOLCOTT has a warmth of character tinged with a sublety of humor which wins him many friends who cherish deep affection and admiration for him and the principles for which he stands. His loss to the House as well as to the Nation will be great, and if the good wishes of his friends have any effect, his days to come will be filled with the best things of life.

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the tribute that is being paid to GEORGE DONDERO in his retirement from Congress. As both the chairman and ranking member of the Public Works Committee, Mr. DONDERO has always been friendly and helpful to me on the committee during our 6 years of service together. He is an able legislator who will be missed greatly in the House of Representatives.

GEORGE DONDERO will also be missed greatly in Washington by his friends and fellow members of the Washington Civil War Round Table. He has been a leader in this organization and has done a great deal to promote proper research and scholarship about the war for southern independence.

Representative DONDERO is without a doubt one of the outstanding present-day authorities on Lincoln. One of the highlights of the past year's program of the Civil War Round Table was his entertaining address on sidelights in the life of Lincoln.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, our good friend and colleague, GEORGE A. DONDERO, has decided to retire from Congress after a distinguished career of 24 years of devoted, unselfish, and constructive public service. He will be missed by all of his many friends in Congress.

It was my pleasure to serve as one of an investigating group of which Mr. DONDERO was cochairman. He proved himself to be a most congenial and considerate traveling companion, who was always most solicitous of his colleagues' comfort and well-being. It was this same spirit which endeared him to all the Members of Congress.

Mr. DONDERO is a man of vision and foresight, who took seriously the trust his constituents placed in him. He served them ably and worked diligently for their best interests. He has high political principles, and it is to his everlasting credit that he stood by them. His record in Congress is a consistent one, and he can look back over the past 24 years of public service with great satisfaction.

I join with other Members in wishing GEORGE DONDERO many years of health, happiness, and contentment as he retires from the active political arena to enjoy a richly deserved retirement.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended 10 minutes, because my time is about to expire, and I have promised to yield to certain gentlemen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasant thing to rise to say we have certainly enjoyed the fine friendship and the working together with people of ability as well as friendliness such as JESSE WOLCOTT, GEORGE DONDERO, RALPH GAMBLE, JIM RICHARDS, CLIFF HOPE, KARL KING, THURMOND CHATHAM, and a host of our fellow Members. We are sorry that a good man from Pennsylvania, also a good friend of mine, is leaving us, KARL KING, who stands up squarely and says what he thinks; DICK RICHARDS, chairman of our Committee on Foreign Affairs, is certainly competent and friendly. You who have worked with these men know they are not only friendly but have been helpful to the young Members coming on. There will be a real spot missing when they leave. We are sorry to see these fine friends leave the House, but not from our recollection, friendship, and memories.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, at this time of the year, as usual, we have the same thing happen. I have had the privilege of serving here with many Members who have decided they can conserve and enjoy life back home. I certainly hope they can.

There is my good friend from Michigan, GEORGE DONDERO, whom I usually refer to as "Doctor," because he has always impressed me as being a doctor and not a Congressman. Also I think you all regret the leaving of JESSE WOLCOTT, who, in my opinion, has been one of the most valuable men ever to serve since I have been here in the House.

Also RALPH GAMBLE, from New York, whom we, of course, hate to see leave the House because of his valuable service here.

As to OLIVER BOLTON, let me say this. In 1938 I came back on a military plane and his father came back on a private plane. Of course we all know of the accident in which he was killed. I have always felt a very close relation to the family because of that fact.

We have in the State of North Carolina two very distinguished men who are leaving these halls and for whom we certainly wish joy in their lives. We hate to lose their services here—F. ERTEL CARLYLE, whose service here has been distinguished, a man who has shown ability and statesmanship and integrity while he has served in Congress. We also hate to see our good friend, WOODROW WILSON JONES, leave here. WOODROW WILSON JONES carries a distinguished name. He is young. He has ability, and he has distinguished himself here in the Halls of Congress. We regret to lose his services. North Carolina, of course, will lose their services here in the Congress, as well as their great ability. I wish them Godspeed and wish them a useful life back home—all of them—Members on the left and Members on the right.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO, and, of course, my associates from North Carolina, F. ERTEL CARLYLE and WOODROW JONES.

I remember on a fishing trip, where there were eight or nine or ten Members of Congress. JESSE WOLCOTT was there. We all put up a small amount of money for whomever got the first and the largest fish. JESSE WOLCOTT got one little fish. The game warden said he ought to put it back in the water. He said, "No, hold it." That turned out to be the only fish caught on the trip.

Mr. Speaker, they are all delightful men. I could stand up here for an hour and extol and enumerate their many virtues and the value of their service to our Nation and this House of Representatives and the Congress as a whole. But it would be a repetition of all the fine things that have been said about them. I shall miss them all. I shall miss each one of them. And, naturally, you know that I shall especially miss my two colleagues from North Carolina, Mr. CARLYLE and Mr. JONES. To all of them I wish the best the world offers. I wish they live long and happy lives and have rich happiness throughout their remaining years.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Michigan [Mrs. GRIFFITHS].

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, whether you are a Democrat or a Republican, if you are from Michigan you realize that when GEORGE DONDERO and JESSE WOLCOTT leave this Congress it is a great loss to the State of Michigan and a great loss to the Nation. We are sorry to see them go. I am happy to have had the opportunity to serve on the Committee on Banking and Currency with Mr. WOLCOTT, and I hope that I can always represent the district which I represent now, which was once represented by Mr. DONDERO, as well as he represented it.

Mr. Speaker, we wish them well.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] may extend his remarks at this point, as well as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SHUFORD], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ALEXANDER], to pay their tribute to the gentlemen who have been so highly eulogized here today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable personal regret that I feel compelled to comment on the fact that this Congress and particularly the North Carolina delegation is losing four fine Members from its rolls at the close of this term: the Honorable THURMOND

CHATHAM, the Honorable ERTEL CARLYLE, the Honorable CHARLES DEANE, and the Honorable WOODROW JONES. I have known all of these fine gentlemen many years. Two of them, the Honorable ERTEL CARLYLE and the Honorable THURMOND CHATHAM, were college mates of mine.

Their distinguished service in the Halls of this Congress is a matter of record and something that their constituency, as well as the American people, can well be proud. No question of integrity, loyalty, or devotion to service has ever been raised by anyone either on this floor or in political campaigns.

The Honorable WOODROW JONES is retiring from Congress of his own free will and accord. The other three distinguished gentlemen were defeated; but in defeat as in victory they were gentlemen, good sports, appreciative of the many fine things their constituency had done for them. Best of all they were men enough even though defeated not to have bitterness but had hearts full of appreciation for the many fine friends they had made and still possess after many years of public service.

Many fine complimentary things have been said on the floor of this House in the behalf of the Honorable CHARLES DEANE and the Honorable THURMOND CHATHAM, in all of which I concur. In the rush of the closing hours neither the North Carolina delegation nor many of the Members of the House who would like to pay tribute to the Honorable WOODROW W. JONES and the Honorable ERTEL CARLYLE have had the opportunity to express themselves. This I would like to do at this moment, for I have a very genuine regard and affection for ERTEL CARLYLE and WOODROW JONES.

Both are fine gentlemen, both sturdy and dependable, both conscientious, effective and honorable legislators, who never for one moment have ever permitted selfish gain, desire for continuation in office or political prominence permitted their clear vision of their duty, their loyalty to their country or their duty to the people whom they represented to be dimmed. They are great Americans. They will continue to contribute much to this great Nation.

May God grant them long and happy lives and the continued love and respect to their host of admirers throughout the United States.

The 4 gentlemen referred to are my friends. I am sure the 4 gentlemen who will succeed them, all of whom I know, are not only fine but able gentlemen, for the people in the districts heretofore represented by their predecessors are loyal Americans, who love good government and intended to send as good Representatives as they have heretofore enjoyed.

Mr. SHUFORD. Mr. Speaker, we regret that our friend, WOODROW W. JONES, is voluntarily withdrawing from the Congress. I have known WOODROW JONES for a number of years and welcome this opportunity to join my colleagues in paying tribute to his fine work here.

WOODROW JONES was born and reared in Rutherford County, N. C., where he early learned the true value of things. He acquired his education in the public schools of the county of his birth and he secured his law degree at Wake Forest College. Following service in the United States armed services during World War II he returned to his hometown of Rutherfordton to engage in the practice of law. In that field he was unusually successful.

I served in the North Carolina General Assembly with WOODROW JONES. In that legislative body he made an enviable name for himself. Because of his steadfast adherence to his high ideals and principles, and his conscientious efforts on behalf of his constituents, he endeared himself to the people of North Carolina.

Here in the Congress WOODROW JONES has an outstanding and distinguished record. He has represented well the American people in his courageous discharge of his duties and thereby has brought honor to his State and the district he represents.

The Congress of the United States will suffer a great loss when Congressman JONES retires. I do not know that he will ever be interested in a public office again, but I do know that he will always be vitally interested and active in public affairs. By this interest I am sure that he will continue to render valuable service to the people of this Nation.

WOODROW JONES is a warm personal friend of mine. I admire him and will miss him tremendously here in Washington. I wish for him and his lovely family a very happy life.

Mr. Speaker, with the adjournment of the 84th Congress several of the members of the North Carolina delegation will complete their congressional service. Among the members of our delegation who will not return to the 85th Congress is the Honorable ERTEL CARLYLE.

Ertel has rendered distinguished service in this body and has brought honor to his State and district. I hold Ertel in affectionate regard. He is a man endowed with sound judgment which for the past several years he has used for the benefit of all of the American people. His integrity and honesty of purpose in his life and legislative work here has been admired by all. Truly he is a great American. I will miss ERTEL CARLYLE. He is a good friend of mine. I wish for him continued success and happiness as he returns to private life.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of profound sadness that I rise to say farewell to my good friend, WOODROW JONES, who is voluntarily retiring from the Congress at the end of this session. I have known WOODROW JONES for many years and we have always been close personal friends. We have served together in the North Carolina General Assembly and have been active together in the affairs of the Democratic Party in North Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I know, probably better than any other Member of this House, the character and personal worth of WOODROW JONES. And knowing him as I do, I realize the great loss we will sustain in the Congress by his departure. At this critical stage in American history, when our country demands the very best that is in our national character, we can ill afford to lose in public service men of the caliber of WOODROW JONES. His devotion to the basic principles upon which this Government functions, is as strong with him today as it was with his early American forebears in their struggle for liberty. He has demonstrated in this House and before the country the courage to do the right as he has seen the right. He has voted his convictions on every occasion and has never violated his conscience. I have often sought his advice and never has he counseled political expediency. In these days of stress and change, WOODROW JONES has stood as a bulwark of courage and personal integrity. We may have had doubts where others stood but there has never been a question as to the position WOODROW JONES would take. Invariably we have found him standing where the best interest of his country reposed.

Mr. Speaker, if I were to select two words to best describe WOODROW JONES, I would choose the words courage and integrity. Of such is the character of great Americans.

As Woodrow returns to his beloved North Carolina, I wish for him with all the sincerity at my command my very best wishes for his future health, happiness, and prosperity. We shall meet again many times on life's broad highway and we shall remain friends until the last long sunset.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in paying a deserving tribute to my good friend, ERTEL CARLYLE.

I regret very much that he is going to leave us at the end of this session. I am proud to call ERTEL CARLYLE my friend because he is not only an outstanding Member of this body, but also because of his sterling character and devotion to public duty. It has been my great privilege to know him very intimately. Everywhere you see him he is the same friendly, courteous, and lovable person. His dry wit and keen sense of humor make him a delightful conversationalist and companion.

Ertel has never sought the plaudits of the crowd or played for the headlines. Nevertheless, he has always worked hard for the public good and has made an outstanding record here in Congress.

Mr. Speaker, ERTEL CARLYLE is a man of courage and conviction. I have never known him to hesitate in telling you exactly how he stood on any issue, irrespective of its controversial aspects. I know that he is held in the very highest esteem by all of his colleagues here in the House. He is a devoted public servant, an untiring worker and a great American.

I wish him well in whatever endeavor he may undertake in the future.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, I really am glad that circumstances prevented my being present in the Chamber when some of our colleagues paid their tributes to WOODROW JONES. Otherwise I would not have had the opportunity of reading what he himself had to say in a farewell address before expressing my own sentiments. I have since read his speech and wish to say that it is one of the most impressive I have ever read. It is marked by the sincerity and steadfastness to principle that characterizes all of WOODROW JONES' utterances.

Woodrow's successor has already been selected. He is a young man of outstanding ability and one with whom I have been personally acquainted for many years. I am sure he will measure up in every way to the responsibilities of the high office to which he has been elected and that he will render outstanding service to the people of his district. However, I think we will all agree that an unusually high standard has been set by his predecessor and that his shoes will be hard to fill.

No Member of this House has impressed me more than WOODROW JONES. Time after time I have witnessed him vote his convictions in spite of tremendous pressures to do otherwise. I think of him as one Congressman of whom it can truly be said that he put principles and love of country above every other consideration. It takes courage to do that. Woodrow has consistently sought, throughout his congressional career, to protect our heritage of individual liberty, to safeguard our unique system of free enterprise, to maintain and promote sound fiscal policies, and to resist the trends toward concentration of more and more power in the Central Government. I can say these things in all sincerity because, while I consider him a warm personal friend, he and I are affiliated with different political parties. It is a great loss to the Nation for him to leave this body. This country needs men like WOODROW JONES in its service:

Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagog
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking.

In my book, WOODROW JONES is such a man. As he goes back home in order that he may have more time to spend with his family—those fine sons really need him now as they are in the period when character is molded and when principles are ingrained—their gain is our country's loss.

In conclusion may I also say to my friend from Rutherfordton that I have greatly enjoyed my association with him in this body; that I deeply appreciate the many courtesies he so freely extended to me; that I respect and admire him for the outstanding record he has made here; and that I sincerely wish for him all of the joys and happiness he deserves.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to associate myself with my distinguished fellow colleagues from North Carolina and others in the House in their tributes to four very able colleagues of ours from my home State who will not be with us in January.

With the departure from our midst of CHARLIE DEANE, ERTEL CARLYLE, THURMOND CHATHAM, and WOODROW JONES, the House will sustain a great loss. The Congress and the Nation are losing the very valuable services of four very able and distinguished Americans.

First, as one of the younger Members of this body from North Carolina, I want to express my deep gratitude to these colleagues and fellow North Carolinians of mine for the very generous and friendly manner in which they received me when I came to Congress. They have been thoughtful, cooperative, and most helpful. I will always be thankful for my associations with them. All of them are men of stalwart character, high integrity, and strong convictions. They have had the respect and love of every one of us on both sides of the aisle. All of them have been very valuable Members of this House. They have contributed significantly to the legislative enactments of the Congress. They have been loyal and faithful to the people of their respective districts, to the great State of North Carolina, and to our Nation which we all love so deeply.

With the passage of time, the committees on which they have served, more than anyone else, will appreciate the loss of their services.

I did not know all of them well before I came to the Congress, but I have learned to admire and respect each of them.

CHARLIE DEANE has been one of the hardest working Members of this House. He is well known here as a fine Christian gentleman, interested in the welfare of the people of America, especially "little people." He is a kindly man. He has been an unsurpassed combination of unswerving devotion to duty, courageous loyalty to his deeply held convictions, and unfailingly sweet spirit. He has been a faithful and able public servant. I appreciate his friendship and I will miss his presence in this body, as I know you will.

I feel rather close to ERTEL CARLYLE because, upon my arrival here, I learned that he participated in the marriage of a member of my family to a distinguished constituent of his. ERTEL CARLYLE is one of the most conscientious and likable Members of this House. He has a friendly and hospitable mind and heart which attract you to him. He is always pleasant. He has an excellent sense of humor. Out of nowhere he has the ability to come forward with a short humorous observation, particularly in private conversations, which enables one to at least momentarily lift the weight of congressional responsibilities from his shoulders and relax in the atmosphere of good humor and laughter. Also I have appreciated the quality in him that looks upon every vote in this House as a serious matter. ERTEL CARLYLE will be greatly missed by all of us.

I have also been extremely impressed by the congenial personality and the stalwart character and integrity of our colleague, THURMOND CHATHAM. He is one Member who has his own convictions. At the same time I have noticed his extreme respect and admiration for the convictions of those who may disagree with him. I am told by members of the Foreign Affairs Committee that he has been a very valuable member of that committee, thinking always in terms of what is for the best interests of America and contributing significantly to legislation which that committee has reported to this House for our consideration. He has been deeply interested in the security of this Nation and the free world. To that end he has aggressively supplied his splendid talents. We will also remember THURMOND CHATHAM as one of the finest hosts in Washington. He and his good wife, Pat, have, on many occasions, been hosts to the Members of this House and other friends of theirs. In this extracurricular activity they have contributed much to our own health, happiness, joy, and contentment here in Washington. THURMOND CHATHAM will not only be missed by the Foreign Affairs Committee but he will be missed by his many friends who have learned to love and respect him for his fine qualities and for his great ability.

I first met our distinguished colleague, WOODROW JONES, when he was serving as a member of the House of Representatives in the North Carolina State Legislature. Though I was across the hall in the other body, representing my own district in North Carolina, I had the opportunity to observe and work with him in action. He was an extremely valuable member of the State legislature, and then, as now, he had those deep-seated convictions which would not yield to trivial, petty, or political arguments or expediencies. I am quite sure that every Member of this House who has come to know WOODROW JONES well is mindful of his strong convictions, particularly when it comes to expenditures. While on some occasions many of us may not have seen things as he did, I am sure that I bespeak the feelings of every one of us when I say that if all of us had voted on all matters involving appropriations, increases in appropriations, or amendments reducing appropriations as he has voted, our national budget would have been balanced long ago. WOODROW JONES has served a very necessary and essential place in this House by being one of its most economy-minded Members. He has been one of the most able and conscientious Members of this House, devoted to the service of his district, his State, and his Nation. The better you know him, the more you love him. His district and State have every reason to be proud of the statesmanlike service he has rendered during his tenure in this House. He will be missed by all of us in more ways than one. I regret very much that he has made the decision to return to the private practice of his profession—law. And yet, I can thoroughly understand and appreciate his wishes to return to his beautiful wife, Rachel, and his two fine sons who have preferred to remain at home during most of Woodrow's service here.

The memory of our association with these four distinguished and very capable Members of this House, who are returning to their homes and other avenues of life, is something which I am sure all of us, on both sides of the aisle, will always cherish and hold near and dear to our hearts. May the tie of friendship and understanding which binds them to this House and to us and us to them ever remain stanch and true.

Individually and collectively they have wrought good works upon us, upon their constituency, and upon their country and the world. Yes, they have wrought good works which will be remembered.

What builds the Nation's pillars high
And its foundation strong?
What makes it mighty to defy
The foes that round it throng?
Not gold, but only men can make
A people great and strong—
Men who for truth and honor's sake,
Stand fast and suffer long—
Freemen who work while others sleep
Who dare while others fly
They build a nation's pillars deep
And lift them to the sky.

Mr. Speaker, truly, we are losing four coworkers of indomitable spirit, leaders whose memory we shall ever hold in the highest esteem. They will be hard to replace. While their individual qualities and interests naturally vary, as do all of ours, I think it can be truthfully said that the seriousness with which they have accepted their obligations, the efficient and dignified manner in which they have executed their duties, and the patient understanding they have always exhibited to their colleagues have contributed substantially to the improvement of this body and its accomplishments.

And so, my fellow colleagues, may I conclude my tribute to these distinguished fellow North Carolinians of mine by wishing for them and their fine families in the days, months, and years ahead the very best of everything and, above all, an abundance of good health, success, and happiness in whatever they undertake.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I could not permit this Congress to adjourn without telling my colleague, Congressman Woodrow W. Jones, of North Carolina, and the Members of the House how much we Members who know him will miss his services here in the House of Representatives during the next Congress. We all sincerely regret that Congressman Jones decided not to be a candidate for reelection after this year. He is one of the most valuable men serving here in Congress as he votes his own convictions at all times and party lines mean nothing to him when a principle is involved.

We should have men of Congressman Jones' ability, character, and experience serving on our Federal benches throughout the United States and on the Supreme Court. I am certain that he has a bright future ahead of him as, I understand, he is one of the most brilliant lawyers in my neighbor State of North Carolina. I have certainly enjoyed having Congressman Jones serve on the House District Committee, as I always knew that he would vote on every proposed piece of legislation for the best interests of the people of the entire Nation.

The Congress of the United States is losing the services of some of its most valuable Members this year and some of them are among my closest personal friends. I do not know of any Member who is retiring from Congress who will be missed more than my good friend, Congressman Jones of North Carolina. I hope that I will continue to have his friendship when he returns to the private practice of law, and wish for him and his family all the success possible during the future years.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join my colleagues in paying tribute to our two very good friends, Jesse Wolcott and George Dondero. Jesse is rounding out 26 years of outstanding service in the House of Representatives and George is concluding 24 years of equally fine representation of his congressional district. Between the two there is a total of 50 years as Members of this body. Michigan, or any other State, never sent to the Nation's Capital any better Representatives.

Eight years ago when I was first elected, both Jesse and George could not have been more kind and helpful to a freshman. Their counseling was invaluable. My first 2 years were on the same committee with George Dondero, the Committee on Public Works. It was an enlightening and stimulating experience to work with him and see the universal respect for him by his fellow members. No newcomer in the Congress could have had a better example of how to be a constructive committee member. I only hope and trust that my future efforts and conduct on whatever committee will approximate his high standards.

Jesse Wolcott has deservedly been the leader of our Michigan delegation and all of us have profited immeasurably by the leadership which he gave us. His great accomplishments for the State and Nation have made all Michiganders rightfully proud. We wish he would stay here with us for many more years for the country needs his wisdom, experience, and integrity, but he has decided to retire for more pleasant and less arduous pursuits.

May I say in closing that I have lost through their voluntary retirement two of my closest friends and advisers. Michigan, in their retirement, is losing two statesmen whose contributions to the public good are beyond comparison. The Congress and the Nation are being deprived of their wisdom, competence, and experience. Their departure is our loss but each of us wishes them the very best in health, happiness, and success.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words concerning a fine colleague, Congressman Woodrow Jones, of North Carolina, though I regret the occasion that prompts my saying them, for his voluntary withdrawal from this body has saddened us all. He is a loyal American who loves good government and who has served his district and his Nation well. I feel that our country can ill afford to lose such Members of Congress. He has by his outstanding and distinguished record in the Congress brought honor to his great State of North Carolina.

I join with his many friends and colleagues in paying tribute to him for his unselfish devotion to duty in rendering valuable service to our Nation. I wish for him continued success and happiness in the future as he returns to his beloved State. I consider it an honor to have served with Woodrow Jones in this Congress.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to rise and join in these tributes to our colleagues in the Congress whom we are losing at the end of this session. I would particularly join in the remarks made by our distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. Dondero], and our very dear friend from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott]. I have known both of these men since I was a very small boy, since my father served in this body for such a long time, and very happily with them in the House of Representatives. I would like to say that we in Michigan feel that our gain in the State of Michigan is the loss of the Congress because we will have them home again.

I know you as well as I will miss them next January when we meet again. Thank you.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hayworth].

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in the two brief sessions in which I have served in this body I have come to realize more than I ever thought I would realize the great fact that above party is character. The two gentlemen from Michigan whom we are honoring are representative of the finest American character. You cannot be with Mr. Wolcott or Mr. Dondero 5 minutes without knowing you are speaking with persons of real substance.

Michigan is proud to have been represented so long by these two great men. They have enriched the life of the Nation and the life of Michigan as well.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I promised next to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sikes] 1 minute.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, throughout their service in this great deliberative body I have been impressed by the conscientious work, great ability, and fine characteristics of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, our good friend, Woodrow Wilson Jones, and the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, an equally good friend, Ertel Carlyle. Both have distinguished themselves by their service to the Congress and to their Nation. They are the type of men we need in Government.

It has been a great privilege for me to be associated with them and to knew them. I shall certainly prize the memories of my work with them in the Congress. We shall miss them and the Nation will miss their valuable services.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, as the 2d session of the 84th Congress draws to a close, I desire to make a few observations relative to my service in this distinguished body. I am voluntarily leaving the Congress at the end of this session. My decision to leave public life at this time is based on personal reasons consisting of my desire to return to my private law practice and to spend more time with my family. I came to Washington to represent the 11th Congressional District of North Carolina during the 2d session of the 81st Congress and have served consecutively in the 82d, 83d, and 84th Congresses. This has not only been a great honor and privilege but also a great personal experience. It is, indeed, a high honor and personal experience which I shall never forget.

During my service in the Congress, I have tried at all times to represent what I considered to be the best interest of my country and the best interest of the people of my congressional district. I am a member of the great Democratic Party which has so rich a history of service to the American people. I am an ardent disciple of the great Thomas Jefferson and a firm believer in the principles of government enunciated by him. I have at times disagreed with some of the leaders of the Democratic Party, but generally these disagreements have been motivated by my belief that these leaders were straying far afield from the principles laid down by Jefferson. I have at all times felt that the interest of my country must come first and, therefore, the interest of my party of necessity must be relegated to a secondary position.

Under the principles of government laid down by Thomas Jefferson and through the blessings of Almighty God, we have developed a great Republic. Never in the history of civilized mankind has the individual achieved such freedom as we enjoy today. Under this freedom and our republican form of government, we have developed the greatest civilization the world has ever known. I am dedicated to our system of government and shall continue to be ever zealous in preserving it. It is my humble opinion that if we are to safeguard our way of life and enrich our Republic, we must adhere to the fundamental principles upon which it is founded. In the experience of mankind and particularly in this modern world many emergencies arise and problems exist. Those who are impatient in meeting these conditions sometime propose remedies which would strike at the fundamental principles of our way of life. In many of these instances the cure is worse than the ill. I firmly believe that these emergencies and problems must be met and solved within the framework of our Constitution and the basic principles of our Government as bequeathed to us by our forefathers.

During my tenure of office, I have voted against many proposals because I firmly believed that they were not in harmony with our basic principles of government. I have at all times been a strong advocate of the free-enterprise system, and I firmly believe that the great progress we have made in this country has been wrought by adherence to that system. There are those who contend that the Government can do many worthwhile things for the American people and do them better than free enterprise. I do not adhere to this belief, and I am convinced that the history of our country proves the truth of my contention. Those who advance the theory that the Government should invade every phase of American activity should review the history of other efforts at free government and learn anew the reasons for their decline and eventual destruction.

All of my adult life, I have been a strong advocate of economy and a firm believer in a sound fiscal policy for our local, State, and Federal Governments. I have contended that deficit spending and financing was a most dangerous practice for a free government and should not be tolerated except in dire emergencies involving the security of our Nation. I have watched with apprehension our Federal Government spend year after year more than it takes in and have seen the Federal debt rise to alarming proportions. My devotion to this belief has led me on many occasions to vote against appropriations which I deemed to be good but which I felt the Nation could not afford. Most every individual in our great country has faced the problem many times of desiring things in life which he could not afford at the time and had to refrain from their enjoyment until his budget was balanced. It is difficult for a man in public office to tell his constituents that he cannot vote for many of the things which they deem to be good but it is absolutely necessary to reach such decisions if we are to retain any semblance of financial responsibility. The American people should know that if all requests made for money are granted that eventually the tax rates will become prohibitory.

I have been alarmed at the tremendous growth of our Federal Government. For the past quarter of a century, there has been a strong trend toward the concentration of power in Washington. I view this as a great danger to the individual liberties of every American as well as our system of government. It is without doubt a serious departure from the fundamental principles taught and practiced by Thomas Jefferson. To many Americans, the doctrine of States rights appears to be old fashioned and has no place in modern government. This is a fallacy which if not corrected will contribute to the destruction of our form of government. Jefferson said, "The government which governs least is the government that governs best." He was pointing out to us that government should not attempt to control the daily lives of its citizens and that government itself could be controlled best at the local level. Americans should remember that all tyranny in the past has been practiced in the name of government. When our forefathers threw off the yoke of English despotism they strove to establish a government here which would never become tyrannical and oppressive of individual liberties. If we are to retain those liberties bequeathed to us by our forefathers, we must be ever vigilant against the growth of government and the concentration of power in one central federal government. Too many Americans, including many of our State officials, look to Washington for the solution of every problem which arises. Somehow our people have been imbued with the philosophy that all wisdom, all power and an unlimited supply of money reside in the Federal Government in Washington. In my humble opinion, the continued growth of this philosophy will engulf us and within a very few years, if not halted; we will wind up with one strong central government and the States will be relegated to the position of mere provinces. If this happens, then our citizens will not be able to go to the city hall, the county courthouse, or the State capital for redress of their grievances, but will have to journey to Washington to present each complaint. Let us all as good Americans strive with all of our might to prevent this from occurring.

We have developed a great country and the finest system of government ever known to man. It is the duty of all Americans to help preserve our way of life. As Thomas Jefferson said:

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

If we are to save our Republic all Americans must be eternally vigilant.

In closing let me say again that it has been a great privilege and high honor to serve in the Congress of the United States. I express my deep appreciation to the people of my congressional district for this great distinction. I have been honored to serve with what I consider to be the finest delegation in the Congress—the North Carolina delegation. To each of them, I express my thanks for all of the courtesies which they have extended to me. I have made many fine friendships here in this body—friendships which I shall cherish so long as I shall live.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to briefly pay my respects to my fellow colleague in the House, the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, JACKSON B. CHASE, who is voluntarily retiring from Congress to return to his home in Nebraska.

Judge CHASE, as he is affectionately and best known to all of us, has given an excellent account of himself during his service as a Member of the 84th Congress. He is one of Nebraska's esteemed citizens, an able lawyer, a former State legislator and district judge, and perhaps is best known in our State because of his legal and judicial background.

Judge CHASE reluctantly left his place on the judicial bench in Nebraska to become a candidate for Congress. It was his high sense of responsibility for public service and the urge of many, many citizens when this vacancy occurred that prompted him to stand as a candidate for this office. Now, he is returning to Nebraska to again seek his first and only love—serving the citizens of our State in a judicial capacity.

It has been a distinct honor for me to be associated with JACKSON B. CHASE, and I can say with assurance that for the short time I have served with him here, my sentiments voice the feeling and impression of his many colleagues, not only from Nebraska, but from other States throughout our country.

I would like to extend my very best to Judge CHASE and Mrs. Chase upon their return home. I wish them Godspeed. They will be sorely missed.

Nebraska is again losing the services of an honest, capable, conscientious, and talented Representative in the Congress.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, it is with a real sense of loss that we realize the service of the Honorable SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER in the House of Representatives is drawing to a close. Months ago he announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection from the Third District of Indiana, but would return to the private practice of law. This is a field in which he and other members of his family have made notable records in Indiana through the years.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] brought to the House of Representatives extensive training both in the fields of law and engineering. This, coupled with his wartime service in the Air Force and his actual experience as the operator of an Indiana farm, provided an ideal background for service in this body.

He is by nature quiet, studious, and objective and has a keen sense of right and wrong. Those who knew him were always impressed with the knowledge he had of pending legislation.

His service on the Judiciary Committee was distinguished. He was a hard-working, diligent member of that group and one whose views were respected because they were objective and fair.

Of his patriotism and love of country, there can never be the slightest doubt. He has demonstrated those characteristics in too many ways, both as a member of the armed services and as a civilian. A great advocate of adequate airpower, he never failed to express his views in that respect when proper opportunity offered. The Members of the House of Representatives will miss his steady, inquiring mind and the counsel which he gave, but certainly those of us who count ourselves among his closest friends wish him every success and happiness as he returns to the practice of law in South Bend, Ind.

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in extending a tribute to SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER. Shep, as he is known to those of us who have been associated most intimately with him, entered the Congress at the same time that I did. As always is the case, Members become much better acquainted and more closely associated with their own class.

SHEPARD CRUMPACKER comes from a long line of legal talent. His family has made its name known throughout the State of Indiana for keen understanding of law and the principles of justice, equality, and freedom. All of these principles were exemplified in SHEPARD CRUMPACKER during his three terms in the House of Representatives.

I feel confident that the Third Indiana District will miss his excellent services. All Members who will be privileged to return likewise will miss him because of his friendliness, his understanding, and studious application to the work to which he was assigned.

I join his many friends in wishing all good things to him and his family. My prayer is that he will be able to continue to serve his community and his fellow man in the same able and capable manner that he served his Nation during the years that he represented the Third Indiana District in the Congress.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Speaker, during my years in the Congress, it has been my privilege to note the coming and going of various Congressmen. I remember so well when SHEPARD CRUMPACKER entered the 82d Congress along with a number of other new Members in January 1951.

I knew some of his family background and from my experience in the Indiana State Legislature had learned that the name Crumpacker in Indiana represents the best elements that are to be found in individuals. SHEPARD CRUMPACKER was no exception to this rule.

In my various associations with SHEPARD CRUMPACKER, I found him to be one of the most studious and attentive Members on the floor. He entered into debate and discussion of legislative proposals with a display of understanding and appreciation of the problems involved.

The third district can well be proud of the services that he rendered. His community of South Bend where he was reared will be fortunate indeed if he continues to make it his home in the future. I join my many colleagues in wishing him God's richest blessings in all his endeavors.

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, Indiana sent five new Republican Congressmen, including myself, to the 82d Congress. Now the first of that group, the Honorable SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER, JR., is retiring from congressional service and will not seek reelection.

It has been a great pleasure and privilege for me to serve with my good friend and fellow Hoosier during the 82d, 83d, and 84th Congresses. He has earned the respect of all of us, and the deep affection of those of us who have had an opportunity to know him well. However long I may serve in this body I am sure I will know few who will equal his earnest attention to congressional business, his fervent desire to do the right thing, and his energetic and faithful service to his constituents.

Although we are both Hoosiers and Republicans, we have frequently found ourselves on different sides of a legislative issue. In such cases I have always reexamined my own position, for I know that he does not form an opinion lightly and that he strives as earnestly as any of us to make the right decision.

With the retirement of SHEPARD CRUMPACKER the Nation has lost a superior legislator. However, we know that Shep's interest and activities for the best in local, State, and National Government will continue. We also know that the legal profession will be enriched by his return to his chosen profession.

I want to join with his many other friends on both sides of the aisle and both sides of the Hill in wishing him the very best of luck in the years to come.

Mr. BROWNSON. Mr. Speaker, it is always difficult at the close of a Congress to say goodby to the many colleagues whose leaving breaks up both a pleasant professional association and the prospects of enjoying fully the close relationships which have developed. The people of the United States will miss many of the men who are leaving Congress tonight. I wish I could pay individual tribute to each of them.

I am particularly interested in pointing out the effective congressional service and the outstanding personal qualities of SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER who has so ably represented the Third District of Indiana for three terms in the House of Representatives. In 1950, Indiana sent five new Republican Members to the House: SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER, 3d District; E. ROSS ADAIR, 4th District; JOHN V. BEAMER, 5th District; WILLIAM G. BRAY, 7th District; and me, CHARLES B. BROWNSON, 11th District. The companionship between Congressmen of a given class is always a close one but the relationship between five of us who came at the same time, serving the same party, from the same State, has been a particular bond. We all regret it must be broken, at least to a degree, as Mr. CRUMPACKER resumes the private practice of law.

Shep, as we know him, has been a quiet Congressman, whose advice has been eagerly sought by those of us who respect his ability to cut through superficialities and arrive at a penetrating analysis of any given problem. I am sure the great Committee on the Judiciary will miss his skills as a lawyer. I know the people of his district will miss the high quality of service which he has rendered to his constituents over and above his legislative responsibilities.

Mrs. HARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in paying tribute to a distinguished colleague, the Honorable SHEPARD J. CRUMPACKER, of Indiana's Third Congressional District, who is retiring at the close of this Congress.

It has been a real pleasure serving with Congressman CRUMPACKER during the past 6 years, and I have greatly appreciated the many courtesies he has extended to me, especially his helpfulness when I had legislation before the House Judiciary Committee, of which he is an honored and valued member.

We shall miss Mr. CRUMPACKER here in Congress but I know God will continue to bless and direct him in all his future endeavors, and I join with his many friends in wishing him well as he returns to the practice of law in South Bend.

The contract for any such advance of funds for a General Neighborhood Renewal Plan shall be made upon the condition that such advance shall be repaid, with interest at not less than the applicable going Federal rate, out of any moneys which become available to the local public agency for the undertaking of the first urban renewal project in such area: Provided, That in the event of the undertaking of any other project or projects in such area an appropriate allocation of the amount of the advance, with interest, may be effected to the end that each such project may bear its proper allocable part, as determined by the Administrator, of the cost of the General Neighborhood Renewal Plan. As used herein, a General Neighborhood Renewal Plan means a preliminary plan (conforming, in the determination of the governing body of the locality, to the general plan of the locality as a whole and to the workable program of the community meeting the requirements of section 101) which outlines the urban renewal activities proposed for the area involved, provides a framework for the preparation of urban renewal plans and indicates generally, to the extent feasible in preliminary planning, the land uses, population density, building coverage, prospective requirements for rehabilitation and improvement of property, and any portions of the area contemplated for clearance and redevelopment.'

"'(2) As used in this subsection, the term "relocation payments" means payments by a local public agency, in connection with a project, to individuals, families, and business concerns for their reasonable and necessary moving expenses and any actual direct losses of property except goodwill or profit (which are incurred on and after the date of the enactment of the Housing Act of 1956, and for which reimbursement or compensation is not otherwise made) resulting from their displacement by an urban renewal project included in an urban renewal area respecting which a contract for capital grant has been executed under this title. Such payments shall be made subject to such rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator as are in effect on the date of execution of the contract for capital grant (or the date on which the contract is amended pursuant to paragraph (3)), and shall not exceed $100 in the case of an individual or family, or $2,000 in the case of a business concern.

In the event that condemnation proceedings are instituted in accordance with procedures under such Act of February 26, 1931, the court shall order that the amount deposited shall be paid in a lump sum or over a period not exceeding five years in accordance with stipulations executed by the parties in the proceedings. In connection with condemnation proceedings which do not utilize the procedures under such Act, the Secretary or his designee, after final judgment of the court, may pay or agree to pay in a lump sum or, in accordance with stipulations executed by the parties to the proceedings, over a period not exceeding five years the difference between the outstanding principal obligation, plus accrued interest, and the price for the property fixed by the court. Unless such payment is made in a lump sum, the unpaid balance thereof shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per centum per annum.

"'(d) Property acquired under this section may be occupied, used, and improved for the purposes of this section prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General as required by section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

"'(e) The Secretary or his designee may, in the case of any housing acquired or to be acquired under this section, make arrangements with the mortgagee whereby such mortgagee will agree to release and waive all requirements of accruals for reserves for replacement, taxes, and hazard insurance provided for under the corporate charter and indenture agreement with respect to such housing, upon the execution of a written agreement by the Secretary or his designee

Amounts equal to the quarters allowances or appropriate allotments of military personnel to whom such housing is assigned as public quarters under clause (1), and the rental charges realized under clause (2), shall be deposited in the revolving fund created by subsection (g).

"'(g) There is hereby created a fund which shall be used by the Secretary of Defense or his designee as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying for housing and related property acquired under this section, paying interest, principal, mortgage insurance premiums, and other obligations (except those for maintenance and operation) with respect to such housing, and paying expenses incurred in the alteration, improvement, rehabilitation, and repair of such housing. The amounts and charges referred to in the last sentence of subsection (f) of this section, and any savings realized in the operation of section 405, shall be deposited in such fund. For the purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "savings realized in the operation of section 405" means the difference between the amount made available for payments under section 405 and the amount actually used in making such payments.

"'(h) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to establish on the books of the Treasury Department the revolving fund created pursuant to the authority of this section. To provide capital for such fund, there is authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $50,000,000 and the Secretary of Defense, with the approval of the President, is authorized to transfer from unexpended balances of any appropriations of the military departments not carried to the surplus fund of the Treasury such sums as may be determined by the Secretary of Defense to be necessary to provide adequate capital for the revolving fund.'

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11742) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the conservation and development of urban communities, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The essential differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below.

FHA TITLE I—HOME REPAIR LOANS

The House bill contained a provision increasing the maximum term of title I single-family home-improvement loans from 3 to 5 years. The Senate amendment contained a provision placing discretionary authority in the FHA Commissioner to raise the term of such loans from 3 to 5 years. The conference substitute conforms to the Senate amendment.

FHA TITLE II—HOME MORTGAGE INSURANCE

The House bill contained a provision increasing the permissible loan-to-value ratio for builder-mortgagors from 85 to 90 percent of the amount permitted for owner-occupant mortgagor. The Senate amendment did not contain this provision and neither does the conference substitute.

FHA cooperative housing

The House bill contained a provision permitting a regular FHA housing project, insured under section 207 of the National Housing Act, to be converted to a cooperative housing project, if the intention to convert such project to a cooperative project was stated by the applicant at the beginning of the project. No such provision was included in the Senate amendment. The conference substitute includes a provision in lieu of that contained in the House bill under which a sponsor of a cooperative could obtain a commitment for a loan up to 85 percent of the replacement cost and proceed with construction before the prospective cooperative has been formed. The sponsor would certify intent to sell to a cooperative upon completion. Until he sells the project, he would be regulated by FHA, as to rents, capital structure, and rate of return. To prevent possible abuse of this financing device, the substitute would deny further use of this special commitment feature in the event the sponsor fails to sell to a cooperative. In all cases the sponsor would be subject to the cost certification requirement of section 227 of the National Housing Act.

FHA TITLE VIII—MILITARY HOUSING

The House bill provided for extension of the military housing program for a period of 3 years to September 30, 1959. The Senate amendment only provided for an extension of this program to December 31, 1957. The conference substitute provides for extension to June 30, 1958.

The House bill provided for an increase in the FHA insurance authorization for military housing projects from the present authorized amount of $1,363,500,000 to $2,475,000,000. The Senate amendment provided for an increase in this authorization to $2,300,000,000, and this amount is retained in the conference substitute.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions requiring the FHA Commissioner to approve Defense Department determinations that new military housing needed would not substantially curtail occupancy of certain existing housing accommodations. The House bill provision, however, was more limited in its application in that if the project was to house personnel who are required to reside in public quarters then the approval of the FHA Commissioner regarding curtailment of occupancy in other projects was not required. The conference substitute includes the provision of the Senate amendment.

Under the House bill, the cost of housing under the FHA military housing program was limited to an average of $16,500 per unit for each project. The Senate bill provided that such average could not exceed $15,000 per project and set a servicewide per unit average of $14,250, including equipment. The conference substitute retains the House provision of a $16,500 average unit cost per project but includes the language of the Senate substitute making clear that equipment such as ranges, refrigerators, shades, screens and fixtures, are items of cost which must be included in the maximum average cost of $16,500 per unit.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions requiring that military housing plans follow the principle of modular measure. In order that prefabricated as well as conventional construction might be employed. The conference substitute retains the language of the House bill, with an amendment to make it clear that the provision applies on a prospective rather than a retroactive basis.

Acquisition of "Wherry Act" housing

The House bill contained a provision directing the Secretary of Defense to acquire, operate, and improve the housing included in the so-called Wherry Act projects. These are projects which were constructed under the FHA title VIII military mortgage insurance program as it existed prior to the revision made by the housing amendments of 1955. The House provision included a purchase-price formula under which the value would not exceed the FHA estimate of replacement cost at time of insurance, adjusted to current cost levels, minus allowance for depreciation. Provision was made, however, that if the project actually cost less than the original mortgage amount or if the buyer or seller could not agree on price, then condemnation proceedings had to be started for acquisition of the project. A $50 million revolving fund was authorized for such purchases and could also be used for meeting debt service, alterations, and improvements. The Senate amendment did not include a similar provision.

The conference substitute includes a Wherry Act acquisition provision which coordinates it with an acquisition provision included in legislation just enacted by the Congress relating to construction at military installations (H. R. 12270). Under that bill there is permissive authority for the Secretary of Defense to acquire the existing Wherry Act projects by purchase, donation, condemnation, or other means of transfer. In negotiating for such projects, the purchase price of any such housing shall not exceed the Federal Housing Commissioner's estimate of the replacement cost of such housing and related property (not including the value of any improvements installed or constructed with appropriated funds) as of the date of final endorsement for mortgage insurance reduced by an appropriate allowance for physical depreciation, as determined by the Secretary of Defense or his designee upon the advice of the Commissioner. The conference substitute does not disturb this provision of the military construction bill except with respect to Wherry Act projects located at or near an installation where new FHA title VIII military housing projects are programed. In such cases the Secretary of Defense is required to proceed to negotiate for acquisition of such Wherry Act projects and, in the event of failure to acquire through negotiation, to institute proceedings for acquisition of the projects through condemnation. It is the intention of the conferees that where FHA title VIII projects are programed under the authority provided by the Housing Amendments of 1955 the Department of Defense shall acquire existing Wherry Act projects.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ELDERLY HOUSING

The Senate amendment contained a provision requiring the Housing and Home Finance Agency to establish an advisory committee on matters relating to housing for the elderly. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conference substitute retains this provision of the Senate amendment.

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

The Senate amendment contained a provision which was not included in the House bill under which the Federal National Mortgage Association would be required to pay par for all mortgages purchased under its special assistance mortgage-purchase program. The conference substitute includes a provision under which special assistance mortgages purchased by the Association must be purchased at a price of not less than 99 for a period of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act.

SLUM CLEARANCE AND URBAN RENEWAL

The Senate amendment contained a provision rewriting the section of the Housing Act of 1949 relating to requirements of local grants-in-aid in connection with slum clearance projects. It was provided "such local grants-in-aid, together with local grants-in-aid to be provided in connection with all other projects of the local public agency on which contracts for capital grants have heretofore been made, shall not be required in excess of one-third of the aggregate net project costs of all projects of the local public agency on which contracts for capital grants have been made." It is the understanding of the committee of conference that under the language of this provision the agency may continue its present pooling arrangement with respect to such local grants-in-aid. In this connection the committee of conference expresses agreement on the discussion of this subject appearing on pages 31 and 32 of House Report No. 2363, 84th Congress, 2d session.

SALARY OF HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY GENERAL COUNSEL

The House bill contained a provision increasing the salary of the General Counsel of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to the level of the heads of constituent agencies of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. No comparable provision was included in the Senate amendment and none is contained in the conference substitute.

Veterans' Administration direct-loan program

The Senate amendment contained a provision which was not included in the House bill extending both the Veterans' Administration home-loan-guaranty program and the Veterans' Administration direct home-loan program for 1 additional year. Other legislation passed by the Congress has provided for a 1-year extension in the Veterans' Administration home-loan-guaranty program but does not include extension of the Veterans' Administration direct home-loan program. Accordingly the conference substitute retains only that portion of the Senate amendment providing for a 1-year extension in the Veterans' Administration direct home-loan program.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC HOUSING IS A VITAL INVESTMENT

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, the amount of money for any purpose is always limited, even Federal funds. In our dynamic economy, Federal investment and expenditure has assumed a major role. We are certainly called upon to weigh every program involving investment with great care and to ask what are the long run as well as the immediate results.

I know of few programs that more directly now and for a long time to come, will repay our investment as well as the relatively small sums loaned, guaranteed or paid out of the Federal Treasury for the well-built homes built as part of the public low-rent housing program. We are all concerned about the present problems and future conditions of our cities and metropolitan areas. As the majority of our population is urbanized, and increasingly so, these living conditions are at the core of our future as a democracy and a nation.

The renewal of our cities is a great frontier of today. The health or disease of our metropolitan areas, of each neighborhood and each home will drastically affect what heritage which we have received and will pass on.

It is my feeling that a greater part of our Federal budget and the budgets of cities and States will have to be devoted to strengthening and improving our urban environment. This is hardly debatable. It is not a luxury or a vague idea but an immediate necessity.

Private enterprise through investment institutions of all sorts, the home-building industry and our excellent supply of labor and materials is doing a big and valuable job, yet it has been clear time and again to the majority in both Houses of the Congress that the blighted cancerous sections of our urban centers need treatment. This treatment includes many programs and various kinds of timing. It also seems clear to me that the construction of homes at a low or moderate rental is an essential part of these programs and this broad stream of investment which is necessary.

Public housing has been an excellent investment in several ways. It is first an investment in people, hundreds of thousands of families living in the presently built dwellings and those who will take their place as they move out. It is an investment in hope, morale, and health.

Beyond this, it is a sound investment in the tax base of cities. A group of public housing developments in Philadelphia, for instance, have more than tripled the actual sums collected on their sites during prior years. While $98,000 was assessed for tax payments but only $77,000 actually collected, there was a total of more than $300,000 actually paid or accrued by 13 low-rent housing developments during the last 12 months. Some of these sites were slum areas in the last stages of decay, a couple were cemeteries which, of course, did not pay taxes, and several others were on vacant, often waste, land. I do not mean to say that public housing should be built on land that is unusable for any other purpose but the facts in this instance, and in many other cities, will show that even the partial payments in lieu of taxes by local housing authorities on their properties have increased incomes to their cities and certainly decreased the negative expenses for fires, disease, and crime.

Private enterprise makes possible most of the investment in public housing by purchasing the bonds in local housing authority. These have a favorable rate of interest, of course, due to the Federal guarantee and the exemption of the interest from Federal income taxes. The bonds have sold quickly and favorably.

Each thousand homes built by public housing with the present Federal aids make possible an investment of $10 million to $15 million depending upon local construction costs and the cost of site acquisition including the demolition of slums. We are actually talking about some hundreds of millions of dollars of private investment which will follow from approval of this public-housing program. In relation to the total housing industry and the total renewal effort, this is a relatively small part, but like the primer charge which sets off a large piece of artillery, the initial impact may be decisive.

In many city renewal efforts, public housing has been the only substantial program for clearance and rebuilding. In neighborhoods of some cities, public housing has been the first concrete evidence and its construction has been followed by other kinds of new investment. The housing construction, in some instances, clearly appears to have encouraged the additional investment. Whether a clear chain of cause and effect can be proven is a matter for debate but the fact exists that other investment took place after the construction of public housing.

We need to make steady progress all along the line of more homes, better homes, and neighborhood improvement. No section of our people should feel cut off, trapped, or hopeless in the effort to have decent homes in a decent neighborhood. Public housing is one bridge over what we hope is a narrowing canyon between slum conditions and at least decent minimum homes. But the canyon is a deep one and the bridges we have already built must be widened.

Public housing is clearly one form of investment with many and continuing returns—for which we are all richer.

FLOOD DAMAGE INSURANCE

Mr. SPENCE submitted the following report and statement on the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2959)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956'.

"FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that in the case of recurring natural disasters, including recurring floods, insurance protection against individual and public loss is not always practically available through private or public sources. With specific reference to insurance against flood loss, the Congress finds that insurance against certain losses resulting from this peril is not so available. Since preventive and protective means and structures against the effects of these disasters can never wholly anticipate the geographic incidence and infinite variety of the destructive aspects of these forces, the Congress finds that the safeguards of insurance are a necessary adjunct of preventive and protective means and structures.

"Inasmuch as these disasters impede interstate and foreign commerce, hamper national defense, and cause widespread distress and hardship adversely affecting the general welfare, without regard to State boundary lines, and in the absence of insurance protection from private or public sources, the Congress ought to provide for such protection in the case of flood, and study the feasibility and need for similar programs in the case of other forms of natural disaster against which insurance protection is not generally and practically available in all geographical areas.

"(b) (1) It is the purpose of this Act to authorize the establishment of a program of Federal insurance and reinsurance against the risks of loss resulting from flood as hereinafter defined, and to require a study and report on insurance and reinsurance against still other natural disaster perils to the extent that such insurance or reinsurance is not available on reasonable terms and conditions from other public or private sources; and

"(2) It is the further purpose of this Act to encourage private insurance companies to write insurance covering the extent of the risks above the limits prescribed in section 10 (a) and to provide Federal reinsurance to the extent desirable and necessary to carry out this purpose.

"(3) It is the further purpose of this Act to authorize the establishment of a program of loans, and a program combining insurance and loans, to assist flood victims who have entered into contracts with the Administrator under this Act.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 3. (a) To assist in carrying out the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this Act, the Administrator may appoint a Commissioner, and the basic rate of compensation of such position shall be the same as the basic rate of compensation established for the Commissioners of the constituents of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

"(b) The provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, shall apply to the functions vested in the Administrator by this Act, to the same extent as applicable to wholly owned Government corporations.

"(c) In the performance of, and with respect to, the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this Act, the Administrator, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, shall maintain an integral set of accounts which shall be audited annually by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial transactions as provided by the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, and no other audit shall be required: Provided, That such financial transactions of the Administrator as the issuing of insurance policies, the making of reinsurance agreements, and the making and guaranteeing of loans, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government.

"AUTHORITY TO INSURE AND REINSURE

"SEC. 4. To aid in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the Administrator is authorized to provide, upon such terms and conditions (including coinsurance requirements) as he may establish, insurance and reinsurance against loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property (including property owned by any State or local government) due to flood, as hereinafter defined, occurring within the United States: Provided, That insurance policies issued under this Act after June 30, 1959, shall be issued only with respect to property in those States which participate as provided in section 7 (a) of this Act.

"LOAN CONTRACTS

"SEC. 5. (a) The Administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with any persons (not including State and local governments and agencies thereof) to the effect that, in the event of any subsequent loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real and personal property due to flood, as hereinafter defined, occurring within the United States—

"(1) the Administrator will guarantee any public or private financing institution against loss of principal and interest with respect to any loan in an amount not to exceed such subsequent flood loss (as modified by subsection (f) of this section, relating to deductibility), which may be made by such institution to any such person in connection with such flood loss; and

"(2) to the extent that a loan to finance such flood loss is not available from any such institution on reasonable terms, the Administrator will make a loan directly to such person in an amount covering all or part (as provided for in the loan contract between the Administrator and such person) of the difference between the amount of such flood loss (as modified by such subsection (f), relating to deductibility) and the amount of the loan available from such institution.

Each such contract shall contain such terms and conditions and require from any such person such monetary consideration, as the Administrator may prescribe by regulation. In issuing such regulations the Administrator shall fix such monetary consideration at the lowest practicable amount, following generally the same principles as apply under section 7 (a) with respect to the establishment of fees for insurance.

"(b) Any loan made or guaranteed under this section shall bear interest at the rate, as determined by the Administrator, which is prevailing in the area where the money loaned is to be used but such rate shall not exceed 4 per centum per annum on the unpaid principal balance.

"(c) Any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the Administrator, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of the Administrator, as fiscal agent of the United States in guaranteeing loans under this section and in otherwise taking action in connection with such guarantees. Such funds as may be necessary to enable such bank to carry out any such guarantee shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority of the Administrator from the Disaster Loan Fund. Such bank shall not have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action in connection with such guarantees. Each such bank shall be reimbursed by the Administrator, from funds appropriated by the Federal Government, for all expenses incurred by the bank in acting as agent on behalf of the Administrator, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

"(d) Action and operations of such banks under authority of subsection (c) of this section shall be subject to the supervision of the Administrator and subject to such regulations as he may prescribe. The Administrator is authorized to prescribe the term and incidental charges for loans guaranteed under subsection (c) of this section. The Administrator is further authorized to prescribe regulations with respect to the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the maximum extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

"(e) To the maximum extent practicable, loans under this section shall be on a long-term basis in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Administrator, if so requested by the person obtaining the loan.

"(f) Loans under this section shall be made only with respect to amounts exceeding the first $500 of the amount of the loss.

"(g) The face amount of all loan contracts outstanding under this section at any one time shall not exceed $2,000,000,000; but such amount may be increased, with the approval of the President, by not to exceed $500,000,000 in any one fiscal year.

"(h) The provisions of sections 8, 9, 10 (a), 10 (b), 12 (b), 12 (c), 13, 14, 15 (e), 15 (g), 17 (a), 18, 19, 20, 22, and 23 of this Act shall be applicable with respect to the loan contract program under this section.

"COMBINATION OF INSURANCE AND LOANS

"SEC. 6. The Administrator is authorized to establish, under such regulations as he may prescribe, a program combining insurance and loans in order to provide the greatest variety and amount of protection against loss to the greatest number of affected parties in accordance with individual needs.

"ESTIMATED RATES AND FEES

"SEC. 7. (a) The Administrator shall from time to time establish a schedule of 'estimated rates' for insurance offered under the provisions of this Act, which would be adequate, in his judgment, to produce sufficient proceeds to pay all claims for probable losses over a reasonable period of years. Such 'estimated rates' shall be used as a basis for determining the fees to be paid by the persons insured. They shall be based on consideration of the risks involved and shall be uniform for similar risks within a given classification of property. They shall not include any loading for administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this Act. The Administrator shall establish a schedule of fees to provide insurance protection at reasonable costs designed to achieve marketability: Provided, That no insurance policy shall be issued for a fee less than 60 per centum of such 'estimated rate'. The Administrator is authorized to establish such classifications of fees as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act based on the use of the property to be insured, the availability of insurance from private sources covering such property, and the ability of the insured to self-insure or reinsure and may establish differentials in levels of fees for such classifications: Provided, That all such fees shall be uniform for similar risks within a given classification of property. Prior to July 1, 1959, the Administrator shall pay into the Disaster Insurance Fund, hereinafter created, from time to time, an amount equal to the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued and the amount which would have been charged if the 'estimated rates' were applied: Provided, That after June 30, 1959, each State shall pay from time to time into the Disaster Insurance Fund, an amount equal to one-half the difference between the fees charged for insurance policies issued after such date on property in such State, and the amount which would have been charged if the 'estimated rates' were applied, and the Administrator shall pay into such Fund, from time to time, an amount equal to the State's contribution for each policy issued.

"(b) The Administrator from time to time shall also negotiate with insurance companies seeking reinsurance for the purpose of establishing fees for reinsurance offered under the provisions of this Act. Such fees shall be based on consideration of the risks involved and shall be adequate, in the judgment of the Administrator, to produce sufficient proceeds over a reasonable period of years to pay all claims for losses. The fees shall not include any loading for administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this Act.

"PROPERTY AND LOSS LIMITS

"SEC. 8. The Administrator is authorized to provide for the determination of types and location of property with respect to which insurance or reinsurance shall be made available under this Act, the nature and limits of loss or damage in any area (including subdivisions thereof) which may be covered by such insurance or reinsurance, and such other matters as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"RISK CLASSIFICATION

"SEC. 9. The Administrator may from time to time issue appropriate regulations regarding the classification, limitation, and rejection of risks assumed by him under authority of this Act.

"POLICY AND PROGRAM LIMITS

"SEC. 10. (a) The outstanding face amount of insurance issued by the Administrator under this Act shall not exceed $250,000 per person: Provided, That the face amount of such insurance on any dwelling unit (including any structures and personal property connected therewith) shall not exceed $10,000.

"(b) The Administrator may from time to time issue appropriate regulations regarding insurance coverage available to joint owners and subsidiary and affiliated corporations as he shall deem advisable to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"(c) Each insurance policy issued by the Administrator shall contain a loss-deductible clause relieving him from any liability for paying the first $100 of a proved and approved claim for loss, plus 5 per centum of the remainder, or such larger amount or percentage as may be specified by the Administrator upon issuance of the insurance policy, taking into consideration the class of risk involved.

"(d) The face amount of insurance policies and reinsurance agreements outstanding at any one time under this Act shall not exceed $3,000,000,000 (which limit may be increased with the approval of the President by further amounts not to exceed $2,000,000,000 in the aggregate if such increase is deemed advisable to effectuate the purposes of this Act) minus the aggregate amount of claims proved and approved under insurance policies and reinsurance agreements issued under this Act, but plus fees collected hereunder. For the purpose of applying this limitation, the face amount of any policy or agreement shall be deemed to be the original amount minus claims proved and approved thereunder.

"REINSURANCE REGULATORY AUTHORITY

"SEC. 11. (a) The Administrator is authorized to issue such regulations regarding reinsurance under this Act as he deems advisable in order to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"(b) The premium rate and terms and conditions of any policy reinsured under the provisons of this Act shall be subject to approval by the Administrator.

"(c) The Administrator shall use his best efforts to encourage private insurance companies to undertake the issuance of insurance policies covering that portion of the loss in excess of the limits specified in section 10 (a) of this Act resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood as defined in this Act. The Administrator may seek to achieve this end by offering a program of appropriate reinsurance within the authority granted him by this Act.

"(d) Wherever practicable, the Administrator may encourage, by offering suitable reinsurance subject to the provisions of this Act, the issuance by private insurance companies of policies insuring against loss resulting from damage to or destruction of real or personal property due to flood.

"NONDUPLICATION OF AVAILABLE INSURANCE

"SEC. 12. (a) No insurance or reinsurance, or loan contract, shall be issued under the provisions of this Act covering risks against which insurance is available on reasonable terms from other public or private sources.

"(b) No insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this Act on any property declared by a duly constituted State or local zoning authority, or other authorized public body, to be in violation of State or local flood zoning laws.

"(c) After June 30, 1958, no insurance or reinsurance shall be issued under the provisions of this Act in any geographical location unless an appropriate public body shall have adopted and shall keep in effect such flood zoning restrictions, if any, as may be deemed necessary by the Administrator to reduce, within practicable limits, damages from flood in such location.

"USE OF OTHER PUBLIC AND PRIVATE FACILITIES

"SEC. 13. (a) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this Act, the Administrator shall use to the maximum practicable extent the facilities and services of private organizations and persons authorized to engage in the insurance business under the laws of any State (including insurance companies, agents, brokers, and adjustment organizations); and the Administrator may arrange for payment of reasonable compensation therefor.

"(b) In providing insurance or reinsurance under this Act, the Administrator may use the services of other public agencies, and pay reasonable compensation therefor.

"(c) The Administrator may supply, receive from and exchange with other agencies of the Federal Government, State, local, and interstate commissions or agencies, and private organizations experienced in the fields of insurance or reinsurance, such information as may be useful in the administration of the programs authorized by this Act.

"(d) In carrying out the functions authorized in this Act, the Administrator may consult with other agencies of the Federal Government and interstate, State, and local public agencies having responsibilities for land use and flood control and for flood zoning and flood-damage prevention in order to assure that the insurance and reinsurance programs are consistent with the programs of such agencies. Where the program of the Administrator may affect existing or proposed flood-control works under the jurisdiction of agencies of the Federal Government these agencies shall cooperate with the Administrator in coordinating their respective programs. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator shall coordinate the administration of their respective programs relating to flood insurance and reinsurance for agricultural commodities.

"(e) The Administrator may from time to time consult with representatives of the various States to the extent deemed necessary by him to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"CLAIMS PAYMENT AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 14. (a) Under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe, he shall arrange for prompt adjustment and payment of valid claims for losses covered by insurance or reinsurance under this Act.

"(b) Upon disallowance of any claim against the Administrator under color of any insurance or reinsurance made available under this Act, or upon refusal of the claimant to accept the amount allowed upon any such claim, the claimant may institute an action against the Administrator on such claim in the United States district court in which a major portion (in terms of value) of the insured property is located. Any such action must be begun within one year after the date upon which the claimant receives from the Administrator written notice of disallowance or partial disallowance of the claim. For the purposes of this section, the Administrator may be sued and he shall appoint one or more agents within the jurisdiction of each United States district court upon whom service of process can be made in any action instituted under this section. Exclusive jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon all United States district courts to hear and determine such actions without regard to the amount in controversy.

"FUNDS AND TREASURY BORROWINGS

"SEC. 15. (a) To carry out the purposes of this Act, the Administrator is authorized to establish three funds to be known as the (1) Disaster Insurance Fund, (2) Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and (3) Disaster Loan Fund.

"(b) Into the Disaster Insurance Fund shall be deposited all insurance fees collected by the Administrator for insurance policies issued by him under this Act, and the contributions made by the Administrator and the respective States in accordance with section 7 (a) of this Act. Into the Disaster Reinsurance Fund shall be deposited all fees collected by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available by him under this Act. Into the Disaster Loan Fund shall be deposited amounts accruing to the United States in connection with loan contract transactions.

"(c) Moneys in each of the funds may be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. Such obligations may be sold and the proceeds derived therefrom may be reinvested as above provided if deemed advisable by the Administrator. Income from such investment or reinvestment shall be deposited in the respective fund from which the investment was made.

"(d) All salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with insurance made available under this Act shall be deposited in the Disaster Insurance Fund; and all salvage proceeds realized by the Administrator in connection with reinsurance made available under this act shall be deposited in the Disaster Reinsurance Fund.

"(e) The Administrator is authorized to issue to the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time and have outstanding at any one time, in an amount not exceeding $500 million (or such greater amount as may be approved by the President) notes or other obligations in such forms and denominations, bearing such maturities, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or other obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes and other obligations to be issued hereunder and for such purpose he is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of such notes and obligations.

"The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the notes or other obligations acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchase, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes or other obligations shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States. Funds borrowed under this section shall be deposited, in such proportions as the Administrator deems advisable, in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund.

"(f) Moneys in the Disaster Insurance Fund, the Disaster Reinsurance Fund, and the Disaster Loan Fund may be used for the following purposes as deemed necessary by the Administrator:

"(1) To pay from the Disaster Insurance Fund proved and approved claims for loss under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with, insurance policies issued by the Administrator under this act;

"(2) To pay from the Disaster Reinsurance Fund proved and approved claims under, and other nonadministrative expenses arising in connection with, reinsurance agreements entered into by the Administrator under this Act;

"(3) To pay from the Disaster Loan Fund the amounts of loans made by the Administrator, amounts in payment of guarantees, and other nonadministrative expenses in connection with direct and guaranteed loans under this Act; and

"(4) To repay to the Secretary of the Treasury sums borrowed from him in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) of this section.

"(g) All administrative expenses of the Federal Government under this Act shall be paid from funds appropriated by the Federal Government.

"ADVISORY COMMITTEE

"SEC. 16. In carrying out his functions under this Act, the Administrator shall appoint an advisory committee as authorized by section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (68 Stat. 590, 645). Such committee shall consist of not less than three nor more than fifteen persons familiar with the problems of insurance or reinsurance, to advise the Administrator with respect to the formulation of policies and the execution of functions under this Act.

"STUDIES

"SEC. 17. (a) The Administrator shall undertake a continuing study of the practicability of extending the coverage of insurance programs similar to those authorized under this Act to any one or more natural disaster perils, other than flood, against which, and for the period during which, insurance protection is not generally and practically available in all geographical locations from other public or private sources.

"(b) The Administrator shall also undertake a continuing study of participation by private insurance companies in the programs authorized by this Act, in order that the protection it authorizes can be provided, whenever practicable, through insurance policies issued by private insurance companies and reinsured with the Administrator, in lieu of providing such protection through insurance policies issued in the name of the Administrator.

"(c) The Administrator shall undertake a continuing study of the feasibility of having private insurance companies take over, with or without some form of Federal financial support, the insurance programs authorized by this Act.

"ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS

"SEC. 18. For the purpose of carrying out functions under this Act the Administrator may—

"(a) sue or be sued;

"(b) without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C. 529 and 41 U. S. C. 5), and section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412, as amended (40 U. S. C. 278a)), by purchase, lease, or donation acquire such real and personal property and any interest therein, make advance or progress payments in connection therewith, and hold, use, maintain, insure against loss, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such real and personal property as the Administrator deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act;

"(d) appoint, pursuant to civil-service laws and regulations, such officers, attorneys, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act; fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended; define their authority and duties; provide bonds for such of them as he may deem necessary; and delegate to them, and authorize successive redelegations by them, of such of the powers vested in him by this Act as he may determine;

"(e) conduct researches, surveys, and investigations relating to flood insurance and reinsurance and assembled data for the purpose of establishing estimated rates, fees, and premiums for flood insurance and reinsurance under this Act;

The annual report for the calendar year ending December 31, 1958, shall contain a list of the States which can be expected to participate in the insurance program authorized by this Act after June 30, 1959. The annual report for the calendar year ending December 31, 1961, shall contain an express opinion of the Administrator, supported by pertinent findings, concerning the advisability of withdrawing in whole or in part Federal financial support for insurance policies to be issued at any time after June 30, 1962, offering protection as authorized in this Act, taking into consideration the desirability of offering such protection. Such opinion shall be accompanied by recommendations for legislative changes deemed desirable by the Administrator in the event the opinion is to the effect that any such withdrawal of financial support is advisable.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserted a substitute amendment. The conferees have agreed to a subsitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. The conference substitute is identical with the House amendment, except in two respects.

The House amendment contained a provision authorizing the Administrator to issue insurance policies on owner-occupied homes at reduced fees if he found that the owners of these homes, as a class, could not afford to pay the fees otherwise chargeable for such insurance under the bill. The Senate bill contained no such provision. The House recedes, and this provision is not included in the conference substitute.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that after June 30, 1959, each State would be required to pay into the disaster insurance fund one-half the difference between the fees charged for policies issued after that date on property in that State and the estimated rates needed to cover losses on such properties. The provisions of the Senate bill on this point were more complete, providing for such matters as consultation between the State and Federal Governments and a statement in the Administrator's 1958 report of the number of States which could be expected to participate in the program after this requirement takes effect. The conference substitute follows the language of the Senate bill, with a technical amendment making it clear that when the States begin to contribute to the insurance fund, the Federal contributions will be reduced by a corresponding amount.

POSTAL RATE LEGISLATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, accomplishments of a Congress are twofold in nature: One, in the passage of constructive legislation; and two, in preventing the passage of unwise and unfair legislation.

The increase in postal rates recommended for the past 3 years by the Republican administration imposed an unfair burden on the users of first-class mail. It constituted a 33⅓-percent users tax. It was also burdensome upon newspapers and magazines. While an increase for newspapers and magazines was justified the rates proposed were too high and too sudden.

The credit for the failure of this bill to pass is due to Democratic leadership.

In 1952, at least 90 percent of the press of the country supported General Eisenhower and the Republican candidates, and the thanks they received was increased burdens that would have adversely affected all of the newspapers of the country, except a few large metropolitan papers, who make most of their delivery by truck, and would have compelled many to stop their publication and go out of business.

It will be interesting to see in the coming campaign, if they will continue to support President Eisenhower and Republican candidates, or support or treat fairly Democratic candidates who fought for fair treatment for the press of America.

In this fight, and it was a hard one—with every effort made by the Republican administration to drive and force the bill through—the Democratic Members fought for fair treatment.

It will be interesting to see in the months ahead if the press of the country gives the Democrats fair treatment.

PROVIDING FOR THE PAYMENT AND COLLECTION OF WAGES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 938) to provide for the payment and collection of wages in the District of Columbia.

FACTFINDING TRIP TO THE MIDDLE EAST

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Timothy J. Murphy, who is a valued friend of mine and a great leader of his splendid organization, recently took a trip to the Middle East.

Upon his return Commander in Chief Murphy made a report of a factfinding trip to the Middle East. It is a report worthy of widespread publicity and consideration.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to include his report in my remarks.

I shall now read the report of Commander in Chief Timothy J. Murphy, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States:

REPORT OF A FACTFINDING TRIP TO THE MIDDLE EAST BY COMMANDER IN CHIEF TIMOTHY J. MURPHY, VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES

Because of the ferment in the Middle East, the Congressional debate on Military and Economic Aid for foreign countries, the precarious status of NATO, and the long term trends that are fraught with danger for the West, I deemed it advisable as commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and also as a Reserver officer in the Navy to visit some critical areas where I could learn something of the grave problems that should be of interest to all informed Americans. Much was learned; and I came away with enhanced respect for the zeal and devotion to duty of most of our Government officials in the areas visited.

I took off on May 8 from the Norfolk Air Station and arrived at the large, well equipped airfield at Argentia, Newfoundland in 6½ hours. There we dined, the plane was fueled, and at 1930 took off in direct flight for the Azores. The green fields, volcanic mountains, and red roofed Moorish type dwellings of these old Portuguese islands surrounded by the blue Atlantic is an enchanting sight particularly when viewed at daybreak and early morning. We should all highly value our NATO ally, Portugal, and be thankful for the opportunity of having United States Air Forces on these important strategic links in the first line defense of the United States. But only a few hours in the Azores and then on with a new crew and some passengers for British Gibraltar and the continent of Europe, via Fort Lyautey in French Morocco, which is a United States Navy installation about 60 miles north of Casablanca. There the Navy maintains an efficient, well-laid-out airbase with modern barracks and an up-to-date commissary and ship's store. Here again another link of our defense against aggression by Soviet Russia, a part of the high price that must be paid to contain a great military power that has the goal of world conquest.

Off to Gibraltar, arriving in an hour. The historic "Rock" looked much like the insurance advertisement we have all known since childhood. Although time was short, opportunity was taken to visit the old rock fortress; see the tunnels hewn from solid rock and hear a few stories of its many sieges and thrilling history. In the atomic age its strategic value is debatable other than importance as a unit of the old British Empire chain for fueling naval vessels, and providing repair facilities, and a landing field. On May 10 we left Gibraltar for the 7-hour flight to Malta, another British base that was of tremendous strategic value in World War II. Much of the day we flew over Algiers and Tunisia, far reaching oceans of sand, flat and desolate, only a few oases here and there. My thoughts went first to the old days of the early American Navy when we fought the Barbary pirates of these Moslem States, and over Tunisia I recalled the first great battles of our troops in this part of the world with remembrance of the sacrifices made by our men in campaigns such as the Kasserine Pass in Tunisia and the all-out assault on Sicily.

In flying into Malta one is impressed by the fact that it comprises the principal British military and naval base in the Mediterranean and one of great strategic value from earliest times; proof of which is it has belonged successively to the Phoenicians, the Greeks, the Carthaginians, the Romans and the Saracens. In 1530, it was given by Charles V to the Knights Hospitalers (therefore sometimes called the Knights of Malta). It should be of historic interest to the members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars that the insignia of our organization, the Cross of Malta, was the distinctive symbol of this ancient band of crusaders and knights.

Malta can take it. We should never forget that in World War II, between 1940 and 1943, Malta was subjected to well over 2,000 heavy air raids by Italian and German planes, but the solid fortifications and air-raid shelters built into the rock and an intensive anti-aircraft concentration kept the Axis from bombing Malta into subjection. In 1942 the entire Maltese population was awarded a decoration for bravery by George VI. It was in 1943 at Valetta, the capital, that the entire Italian Fleet surrendered to the British. And while speaking of things nautical, St. Paul was shipwrecked on this island of Malta, a land of classical antiquity.

Still May 10 and flying over Sicily en route to Naples. Here in 1943 with heavy losses and against stubborn defense an Allied landing was effected with troops from the North African bases. It was in the general sea area of these landings that the Romans defeated the Carthaginian fleet 256 B. C. But if one wants to delve in early history one is reminded that the leading Greek city of ancient Sicily was founded 734 B. C. Since peace has come to this part of the world it seems long ago that General Patton and his Americans stormed the beachheads of this rugged Italian island at the toe of the Italian "boot." However, history will ever record how our men of the New World fought and died on historic seas and ancient battlefields in lands that once knew the grandeur of Greece and the glories of Rome.

Soon we were flying over beautiful Capri and got our first thrilling view of old Vesuvius and the hauntingly beautiful harbor of Naples. Although the inhabitants appear to be packed like sardines in the city of Naples, they are a gay, carefree people loving their music and their wine, and particularly friendly to the Americans stationed there. For those not informed it is well to know that Naples serves as NATO southern European headquarters and the main base of all of our naval activities in the Mediterranean. It was my good fortune to meet shortly after my arrival Capt. Harry Cross, United States Navy, attached to NATO in a public relations capacity. He made clear the definite policies of doing all possible to effect in the peoples of free Europe good will for our Armed Forces, wherever stationed or billeted. It was heartening to learn how the senior officers of all our services pay special attention to this important factor in our foreign representation with particular emphasis on furthering the good name and prestige of the United States as a country.

Also I had the opportunity while in Naples, at a reception, to meet some senior representatives of the Department of State and a good number of the officers of other NATO nations. One is much impressed by the all for one and one for all spirit of these officers who until recently served under the supreme command of Gen. Alfred Gruenther and now under the command of the able General Norstadt. Their problems are many but as Americans we should be eternally grateful for the achievement of NATO in the way of providing a common defense in these perilous years of the cold war.

On May 13 took off for Rome to make connections for my flight to the Middle East. Because of the low altitude it was a most interesting flight because one could observe closely and distinctly the villages perched on crags and hills, the little farms, the olive orchards, and the vineyards of this ancient land. And as for Rome, I thought of the millions of pilgrims and sightseers who have been thrilled through the centuries by the recall of its many classical, historical, and sacred associations. But I did not have much time to reflect on such things because of my disappointment on learning that the flight to Athens had been canceled. Because of my haste to get on to the Near East, the lands I came to visit, arrangements were made for a commercial flight to Athens, leaving Rome early morning and arriving in 3 hours at Athens. So after 5 days from the United States I was in the land of Plato, Socrates, and Aristotle; Greece, the country with the longest history of any country in Europe.

Before taking a look at the problems of modern Greece, it is well to recall that Greece has had many lives and died many deaths. Think of it, invaded in whole or in part by Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Gauls, Goths, Slavs, Franks, Norman, Sicilians, Genoese, Florentines, Navaresse, Venetians, Catalans, Turks, and Germans. From all she has taken something but invariably, as it has been written, she has "led captivity captive." However, many qualities of the conqueror have molded the modern Greek character yet love of liberty and life, a certain perennial youth, and strong religious solidarity are marked characteristics of the Greeks, our ally in the Atlantic Pact.

We must remember that the Truman Doctrine contributed to a major degree in bringing domestic stability to Greece and preventing the country from becoming a Soviet satellite. Since 1944, UNRRA assistance, British financial aid, then American aid through the Truman Doctrine, Marshall plan, and MSA has amounted to over $2½ billion. About one-third of this huge sum was used in a bitter war to defend the 52,220 square miles of Greek territory from Communist aggression; and the rest of the money restored the economy of a country that suffered an estimated $7 billion damage in World War II.

The American Embassy had been apprised of my visit and an automobile came to take me to the Chancery. I had the opportunity at this time to see a most colorful ceremonial of Royal Guards in honor of President Heuss, of West Germany. These striking soldiers of the Royal Guard, members of the Evzones, a select infantry unit, wear the traditional kilt of the mountain warriors. Some of the short pleated skirts contain 40 yards of material and with tasseled cap, braided jacket, leggings, and red shoes with black pompons, comprise one of the most colorful elite corps in the world. After this royal ceremonial I met Admiral Cooper, United States Navy, who gave me a thorough briefing on the past performance and the duties of the joint United States Military Assistance Team. I learned of the functions of this group in the distribution of the military weapons and supplies, something distinct from the planning and liaison duties of NATO. Because it is a command and supply question, it would seem that to combine these functions would be extremely difficult. It is as if in the Navy the admiral or the captain took on the functions of supply officer in addition to other well-defined and important duties. There is the question of whether NATO should take over these duties.

I had talks with the representatives of the United States Information Service and NATO as well as an excellent briefing by Mr. Thurston, the Consul General, on the explosive question of Cyprus. The United States Ambassador to Greece, the Honorable Cavidis Cannon, was most courteous and helpful. Our senior representative in Greece gave me a clear and factual picture of the problems that face both the United States and the Greek Government in this bitter dispute. The Ambassador gave unstintedly of his time to make clear the unique aspects of the Cyprus controversy with its threat to peace in that part of the world with emphasis on the fissure that already exists in Greek-Turkish relations. For this education in international relations, I am indeed grateful. It is a huge problem and cannot be oversimplified.

I was most fortunate to meet a well informed Greek gentleman, Elias P. Demetracopoulous who had been a prisoner of both the Germans and the Communists. Because of his long experience as a newspaperman and writer treating of world affairs, he had met most of the political and military leaders of the Middle East and the European world and was in a position to make clear many questions of history and policy pertinent to the general area of the Near East. When I paid my respects on the next day to the American Embassy, Mr. Demetracopoulous was there and accompanied me in my call on the Minister of Foreign Affairs, His Excellency, Mr. Spyros Theotokis. In explaining the more serious problems that occupy him and confront his government, I was particularly impressed by two points that he made.

First: That when other countries were occupied with rehabilitation after the ravages of World War II, it was the fate of his country to fight another long and bitter war with Greek Communists; a struggle that although called by the outside world, a civil war, was in reality a war that had aid and direction from Moscow. He emphasized that the war had been won by loyal Greeks with military assistance from the United States but that no foreign troops took part and that only the lives and blood of Greeks were lost. It was a costly war both in lives and wealth and one that had to be won before rehabilitation could be commenced. After victory Greece as all the world knows made great strides to build a sound peacetime economy. Second: The Minister made the point that under no condition can the United States ignore the Cypriot national struggle. He compared the United States, the leader of the Free World to that of the captain of a football team with the players as our allies and colleagues and stated that a good captain works for harmony among all his players in order to achieve the mission and win the game.

I was fortunate to have an interview with Lt. Gen. Constantine Dovos, the Chief of the Greek National Defense Staff. The distinguished general who was severely wounded in the Greek civil or Communist war was also a veteran of brilliant military record in both World Wars. He strongly emphasized that from a military viewpoint NATO is essential to Greece and that Greece is important to NATO. He expressed the hope that under no circumstances would NATO disintegrate or lose its vitality. He made the observation that in the event of aggression by the Communist world that Greece was the back door to Yugoslavia and a base for the Free World in the Near East.

As for NATO, General Dovos hoped that major differences would be resolved because it was difficult to explain to people that NATO will save and protect them from their enemies when it permits them to be abused by their friends. In fact, he advocated a much stronger NATO; one that would function and meet problems under a constitution positive charter or more authoritative direction at the top, in contradistinction to the present loose and flexible organization. He reasoned that this positive order giving authority should be in and a part of NATO; that because after all NATO is an organization of 15 allied nations forming a common front against Communist aggression and Dovos was of the opinion that because of the aims, objectives and ideals inherent in NATO's mission is in a much better position to decide major defense issues than the United Nations with its 87 countries, many of which are not familiar with or have no connection with NATO.

From this very direct and thought-provoking conference, I was taken to call on the Minister to the Prime Minister, Constantine Tsatsos, a gentleman, small in stature but dynamic and engaging in personality who informed me immediately that his government was pro-Western and always would be—however, it was still a government that depended upon the votes of the people. He added that the Greeks are extremely political, fond of disputes, and most sentimental on national issues. He remarked that although the American Ambassador had stated the people were too stable to abandon a pro-Western government of Greece that at times he was not so sure because of the way the Communists were exploiting and with all the acumen of genius the problems of Greece. For example: On Cyprus the Communists are against liberation, while on the mainland they urge liberation; and to disrupt the Atlantic Pact, the Communists are agitating for a Tito, Athens, and Cairo Axis. I learned while in Greece of the subtle nets of interest that Greece has with her neighbors, therefore, the problem is—how to repair, strengthen, and preserve them without weakening the Atlantic Pact and Greek membership in that far-flung peaceful alliance.

As for Cyprus, he believed that the Greek position was very moderate. Annexation was not sought but rather local autonomy under the Crown first and after a constitutional form of government had been firmly established and functioning then the matter of self-determination could be brought to a vote by the people of Cyprus. The minister maintained that the status quo of military installations would not be affected and that any description of agreement relative to the preservation of the right of the military to maintain bases was acceptable. He felt the type of government he advocated could set up constitutional guaranties that would give adequate protection to the "Turks" living on that unhappy and terror stricken island. He maintained that all the equities were on the side of the Greek position and that the issues should be met before the situation worsens in the present highly charged political atmosphere.

When making my final visit to the Embassy to bid farewell and express my heartfelt thanks for the courtesies extended, I noted the elaborate ceremonies and gala decorations in Athens to honor the Shah of Iran who was making a state visit. The Royal Palace and state buildings were draped with Greek and Iran flags, full dress uniforms of the military and civil were to be seen in the vicinity of government buildings—all of which was most colorful and impressive.

On May 17 with a last look from the air at the Parthenon, the masterpiece of harmonious perfection that has inspired poets and architects of every age since Phidias built it about 500 B. C., we were on our way to Ankara, Turkey. On May 18, I was met at the American Embassy at Ankara by the senior military attachés who conducted me to senior officers in the Consulate General and there I received an excellent briefing on the Near East problems and particularly the Turkish views on the contentions and arguments of the Turks. One is impressed by the cumulative venom of age-old feuds, wars, and bloodshed. It is most difficult, too, for the average American to understand from afar the mental conditioning of peoples of divergent stocks and religions who have been in bitter disputes for centuries and who now, in an age of self-discrimination, are prone to permit their sentiments and prejudices to overlook hard facts and present Communist threats, to the end that local, national views obscure the larger picture of world affairs. These are some of the things that American voters should understand before glib remarks as to what Greece, Turkey, and other countries should do. However, we have some of that attitude in the United States. As in this country, the electorate must be considered, and over there sometimes the intelligent but more often the illiterate and uninformed are influenced largely by ancient grudges. And also, it must ever be kept in mind that there, as here, a sound foreign policy must rest on a sound basis of domestic stability. In the Near East that usually means something to eat, and lodging.

On the evening of May 18, I had the opportunity of meeting many officials at the United States Armed Forces Day reception. Not only were the United States representatives and our allies present but many military and diplomatic officials of countries behind the Iron Curtain were in attendance. It was a friendly and beautifully arranged social event that cast credit on the Armed Forces of our country and enhanced our prestige as a Nation.

I was much impressed by the blend of old and new in the capital, Ankara. The seat of government was transferred there in 1923 by Kemal Attaturk, the dynamic revolutionary leader and modernizer of Turkey. Ankara was a commercial city in the ancient days of the Hittites, 1300 B. C., and in the first century A. D. was the capital of a Roman province. The old part of Ankara that I visited is still most primitive comparable to a large section of Seoul in Korea—without running water, sewage, or any so-called modern conveniences. The houses were ancient, crowded, and packed with people. I thought while there of how necessary it was to keep striving to improve the lot of the poor and underprivileged—of redoubling the effort to raise the standard of living throughout the world in order to combat successfully communism's appeal to those who have nothing to lose or so they think when they embrace its ideology.

I was surprised to learn that about two thousand Americans live in Ankara, the greater number of the male adults are attached to the various Government missions, commissions of military and technical assistance, and the Department of State. There did not seem to me that there was much fraternization or integration, probably because of the language barrier and customs. The Americans have their own post exchanges, clubs, schools and places of entertainment and while there is not much mixing there is no doubt that there is mutual respect of each nation for the other.

In talking with General Riley, of the United States, about the aid for Turkey, he made it clear that Turkey needed and should receive aid, particularly in the light of the fact that Turkey had always been in our corner. He added that she had never exacted a promise or condition from us for the aid. As to how long this aid program should continue, he was not sure. Mr. Hirshberg, an American economist, joined us and gave an interesting account of the rise in Turkish industry and agriculture that had been stimulated by United States aid, but at my visit production was down because of the lack of foreign exchange.

While in Ankara, Mr. John Goodyear arranged an appointment for me to call on Orham Eralp, Director General of the Second Department of the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a department that covers much of the troubled, critical, and strategic areas in the world. He escorted us to meet His Excellency, Nuri Birgi, Secretary General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who was in charge of the office in the absence of the Minister. Mr. Birgi has the reputation of being a very scholarly, erudite, and brilliant man, and certainly leaves that impression in an interview. I frankly told him that I was on a factfinding mission and desired to report to policymakers in the VFW exactly what I learned in order that they would get a more precise picture of the problems of the Near East, and particularly as to United States aid to the countries of this general area. I told him what the officials of the Greek Government had told me as to their position on Cyprus. He then, in a logical, incisive, and scholarly way, met all the arguments of the Greeks and expressed his own and the views of the Turkish Government. I felt that I had heard in Greece and Turkey, as does a judge in court, both sides of a most controversial and complex question presented by about the most able and senior representatives of the two respective nations. It was an education, a rare experience that I shall never forget. And on the question of Cyprus, Mr. Birgi said that he had lectured at the NATO War College at Istanbul. The matter of self-determination of the Cypriots arose, and Mr. Birgi asserted that it was his observation that no United States State Department official or military man there would unconditionally favor the right of self-determination to be the conclusive and deciding factor of area status.

As a preliminary of a discussion on United States aid, I told the distinguished statesman that a good number of people at home thought that many foreign countries not only accept but expect aid and that when the time comes to stop or curtail it, we will no longer have friends but on the contrary have tried to cultivate countries that are basically unfriendly. To that Mr. Birgi replied in substance: Turkey has been advised and conditioned that United States aid is not permanent, will be diminished and will eventually be curtailed. However, because the aid is authorized by yearly congressional appropriations no precise planning can be made for its distribution. He made the point emphatically that United States aid had had a tremendous impact in raising the economy of the free countries and most certainly had bolstered United States national security as well as theirs. But he did feel strongly that the matter of aid could have been developed and given in a far more effective way. He was fair and also qualified his remarks with the observation that it was relatively simple to sit on the sidelines and point out defects. He stressed the fact that the Turks had an abiding love for Americans and had never put any conditions or limitations on their allegiance to NATO and the cause of our country. This, he added, is not the case in some countries.

He believed that originally aid should have been given under the following three categories:

1. Those who unequivocably support, are loyal to, and attach no strings or conditions to their commitment to the major international policies of the United States.

2. Those who have sincere and valid reasons to modify or condition their commitment to the United States.

3. Those who accept the aid with thanks but who are neither anxious nor willing to commit themselves to the general international policies of the United States or the cause of the free world.

Mr. Birgi advanced his informed opinion that the United States in its bountiful generosity had left the impression in some countries that if the Soviets made a conciliatory gesture or promised some aid to a country, the United States ran after the country with a "basket of fruit," asking that they accept some. This had left an impression that United States aid had in some places not been unselfish but rather a counter to Soviet gestures and promises that might never have been realized. He believed the Soviets used this tactic to keep the United States on tenterhooks and at the same time insure that we expend more than was necessary in foreign aid for some countries.

I have no doubts about the friendship of the Turks for the United States. We shall never forget their fierce fighting in Korea. Think of it—soldiers that get 17 cents a month in pay. Yes, it is 17 cents a month—and most from poor families.

On May 23 in preparation for my visit to Israel I had a most interesting conversation with Colonel Gaon, the Israeli military attaché to Turkey. He pointed out the great strides that his poor and small country were making with emphasis on the hostile borders and the adverse criticism and bad public opinion relative to the Gaza strip. He was proud of how his countrymen and government has brought arid land into production and commenced the first industrialization of its kind in that part of the world. The Colonel said that the inhabitants of Israel reflect all shades of political philosophy and beliefs with a small percentage of Communists. I looked forward eagerly to my trip to Israel and the Holy Land for although tension would be high between Jew and Mohammedan, I know of no clear-cut solution to the many differences dividing these troubled lands and I at least would have the opportunity to visit the places where our Judeo-Christian civilization was born and visit shrines that are the symbols of my religion.

It was on the drive to the splendid, modern airport at Ankara that I was forcibly impressed with the age of these historic lands, the links with the past and of man's eternal struggle to survive in a land of scarcity. I saw a living picture that made one think of nomads, Old Testament characters, and ancient history. There on the crest of a hill, silhouetted in the setting sun, outlined in golden light, was an old Turk riding a sturdy little ass and shepherding his precious caravan of a cow, a goat, a sheep, and a dog. He was pointed toward a rugged, primitive baked-brick hut on the crest of the hill, a son of Allah who was going home to rest, an ageless picture for this part of the ancient world—the life of his fathers.

However, farming methods are slowly changing. In 1948 Turkey had no more than 2,000 tractors, but today, partly as a result of $500 million in United States aid, there are 20 times that many. The old and new can often be seen side by side. Turkey, only 10 years ago, raised barely enough wheat for its own people, has now become a large world exporter. A country of the type of Turkey will not forget this aid from the United States, and as Mr. Birgi told me, although the United States is the benefactor now, the time may come when she will be glad to have all possible aid from those she once befriended. That could be.

On the flight to Beirut, in Lebanon, I sat beside Mr. Robert E. Lee, who was connected with OCA, and told me of the various projects in that part of the world that were receiving the attention of our Government. Had I time, I should have enjoyed some sightseeing off the beaten track; for example, Damascus, which is said to be the oldest city in the world, but I was conforming closely to my original mission of learning all the modern history I could absorb. Comdr. Frank Kelly, the American naval attaché, met me, but in the short time I was unable to get an embassy briefing on the Arab-Israel controversy, and left on May 24 for Jerusalem. I was fortunate on my arrival to join a small pilgrimage that was visiting Christianity's holy places. One has an indescribable feeling when, after visiting the remains of Herod's Fortress, where Christ was condemned, walking the approximate route that Jesus walked to his triumph and death over 1,923 years ago. And never shall I forget standing on the ancient hill of Calvary and there entering the venerated shrine of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, that covers the site where Christ arose from the tomb after His Crucifixion, for it was there in the words of St. Luke, "They found the stone rolled away from the sepulcher." The original church was built by Constantine the Great in the fourth century and is decorated with ornate lamps and candelabra given by kings and emperors of the eastern and western Christian empires. All that I had ever learned of the Blessed Mary and her first born came to mind when I visited the Church of the Nativity in the village, the holy town of Bethlehem of ancient Judea. The Christian world owes a great debt to the eight-hundred-odd Christian monks, priests, ministers, and missionaries who care for these holy places in the old city of Jerusalem.

On May 25, Mr. Eugene H. Bird of the United State consulate gave me an up-to-the-minute exposition of the Arab-Israel situation, its many ramifications and knotty problems. Colonel Hodman, of the United States Marine Corps, escorted me into "No Man's Land," the international zone, where the United Nations Headquarters is located. Here in a beautiful modern building that permits a striking view of Jerusalem, I was presented to General Burns of the Canadian Army, head of the United Nations Delegation, who talked of the various aspects of the tense situation. He made it clear that the United Nations was a factfinding body and had no immediate jurisdiction in the matter of the sales of arms or authority as to whether or not there should be an arms embargo. He indicated that he hoped neither side would be further armed and that an international agreement could be negotiated with mutual agreement that the signers would not furnish arms to either side. He was relieved that the situation was much better than in April.

In conversation with two political attachés of the United Nations, I was told that the situation remained tense and highly charged with emotion on the part of both sides with the added comment that even though the shooting had died down, it was preferable to have a cooling-off period before positive steps be taken in the attempt of negotiation. Informed officials give the impression of hoping for the best but fearing the worst.

On May 26, after receiving an exit visa, Mr. Bind, of the American consulate general, took me through the well-defended Mandelbaum Gate. After clearing the officials of the Jordan side, I was then cleared after inspection to the Israel side and driven to our consulate. My first impressions of Israel and her people were excellent. One is struck by the modernity of the streets and buildings, the well-dressed and cheerful people. It is as if one went from an old world to a prosperous new one although I am told there are Jewish refugees living presently in shoddy camps and in abject poverty. However, it is doubted whether any country in history has ever made so much progress in such a short time.

Mr. Teddy Kolluch, an influential gentleman in the Ben-Gurion government, stressed what his country had done in the way of soil reclamation and the establishment of industry. He discussed the huge and pressing problems of placing refugees as they arrived, getting them in communities and making them self-sustaining and productive. We then drove into Tel Aviv, where we saw striking evidence of the things Mr. Kolluch had talked of, good streets, water conservation, electric power lines, villages of modern construction, and a general air of order and purpose seemed the rule. There is no argument, it presents a decided contrast with the Arab countries, where in most areas sanitation, ordinary cleanliness, and personal hygiene are almost unknown. I hope that the cease-fire truce will be maintained between the two distinct civilizations and that Mr. Dag Hammarskjold and the United Nations will in time effect a workable modus vivendi. Feelings are now high, and the conflicting forces in the Middle East, all exacerbated by Communist connivance and conspiracy, do not augur well for the future. The Crown Prince of Yemen and the Shah of Persia have been to Moscow, and the new dictator of the Near East, President Gamal Abdel Nasser, is planning his visit. Some informed observers believe that when Israel's Premier David Ben-Gurion dropped his Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett last month, June, that he is paving the way for a tougher policy toward his Arab neighbors.

On May 27 left Tel Aviv by commercial plane, crossing the fabled island of Rhodes, where once existed one of the wonders of the world, the famous Colossus—and it was not built by Hollywood. With a stop at Athens, we went soon on our way to the heel of Italy. And thence up the beautiful east coast of Italy, with its green farms and fertile, well-kept fields, on to Rome, the Appenines, and out over the snowcapped Alps to Paris. Here, after a short meeting with our VFW officials of the Benjamin Franklin post in Paris, off again for Brussels and home.

For the period of time much territory was covered and very much learned in the way of unsolved problems, dilemmas, and a peculiar awareness of the nature of the threat of long-term communism in the Middle East. I believe that many of our officials, although not talking for publication or attribution by observers traveling in my capacity, are genuinely worried. There is no doubt that the Communists are working night and day to win the good will of the seething, unpredictable Arab world.

For example in Libya, the pressure, extent, and tenor of Soviet propaganda reached such a pitch that most propaganda activities of foreign governments have been prohibited, while Somaliland has filed formal complaint with the United Nations on the same activity. It is reported that in Jordan the pro-Egyptian Army group that ejected British Lt. Gen. Sir John Glubb is becoming more influential in politics and power. While all report that Nasser is doubling his efforts to weld a Moslem bloc with, of course, himself as dictator at the helm. Nasser is also behind the steady penetration of Islam into pagan Africa. We must remember that Soviet technical missions are also making hay in the countries of the Near East which brings us to an important point—how much technical aid should go to the countries in this area. Note, I said in the area of the Near and Middle East?

First, I believe that there should be an unbiased, nonpartisan evaluation and reappraisal of the whole question of technical and military aid. Times are changing and changing fast. This time last year we could call the Mediterranean a Western Powers' lake; all that has happened within a year in the way of Soviet gains in the area has greatly changed that situation although the West still has a preponderance of air and sea power in the area. But I believe that the Western Powers should make every effort to resolve the Cyprus situation and bring about better feeling between Greece and Turkey. They are both on our team; they can fight; and we need their bases for operations in that part of the world. Therefore, we should go slow in curtailing economic or military aid in that area but a study should be made of the balance or proportion between that purely technical and that classified as military. Both categories of aid should be regarded as a means of increasing our own national security in its global considerations, and certainly not as some people facetiously refer to it as a "giveaway program."

After this interesting and eye-opening trip I am more convinced than ever that Russia is still hell bent for achievement of her mission of world domination. It is true that the Kremlin got to smelling so badly that the old ax men of Stalin had to do some fumigation and blame their once dear leader for some of the murders, conspiracies, and diabolical crimes. But have they the willing servants of the late monster of Red terror taken any blame for the crimes they carried out at this direction and in the hope of their personal rise to power? Emphatically, no. Rather have they taken another tack, a wiser one diplomatically, and one that could lull us into a false sense of security: it is that of peaceful competitive coexistence with much publicity about manpower cuts and disarmament. For all who believe this twaddle, I request that he give some thought to a quotation from a speech made in 1931 by a brilliant Russian Communist to the Lenin School of Political Warfare in Moscow.

"War to the hilt between communism and capitalism is inevitable. Today, of course, we are not strong enough to attack. Our time will come in 20 or 30 years. The bourgeoise will have to be put to sleep, so we will begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record. There will be electrifying overtones and unheard of concessions. The capitalist countries, stupid and decadent, will rejoice to cooperate in their own destruction. They will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down we will smash them with our clenched fist."

The Soviets are now on one phase of their peace offensive making neutrals of those who cannot be enveigled as allies, stirring the Moslem world against the Christian and Jewish world, retaining the basic features of a political philosophy that permitted a Stalin to rise to unbridled power, building nuclear weapons at a heavy pace, and putting out the hand of peace and friendship at every opportunity. In short, the only hope of preventing a third world war is predominant strength, readiness for massive and instant retaliation, and a dedicated people with the fortitude to make great sacrifices even in a cold war.

In history's greatest contest for survival we must keep strong or we shall fall.

THE HONORABLE JOHN PHILLIPS

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. GUBSER] is recognized.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. UTT].

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to pay tribute to our colleague from California, Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, who has served here many, many years. I had the privilege of serving in the State legislature with JOHN PHILLIPS, starting in 1933, at which time he represented the county of Riverside, Calif. Later he became Congressman from my district and still later that district was divided and I took a portion of JOHN PHILLIPS' district.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no man in this House who has rendered a greater service to his country, to his State, and to his district than has JOHN PHILLIPS and I take this opportunity to wish JOHN PHILLIPS all of the success in the world in his retirement and to congratulate him for the marvelous service he has rendered, the unselfish, dedicated service he has rendered.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the gentleman from California in paying tribute to JOHN PHILLIPS. Mr. PHILLIPS and I came to this House at the same time almost 14 years ago. One always feels a special kinship for the people of one's own class, so to speak.

JOHN PHILLIPS is an extraordinarily industrious person, with a capacity for infinite pain in analyzing facts and figures. He is a hard-headed and a level-headed man who looks at the fine print as well as the big print. He has worked steadily and courageously in the best interest of our country as a whole in the complicated field of appropriations. At the same time, he is always kindly, courteous, and considerate.

All of us who have known and worked with JOHN PHILLIPS have experienced ever-increasing regard, respect, and admiration for him. We are sorry to see him retiring, voluntarily, because I am sure he could have stayed here as long as he wanted to, if he had been willing to run.

Mr. Speaker, I extend to Mrs. Phillips and John my warm good wishes and trust that in their retirement they will have the best of all goods things.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay a brief tribute to my friend, JOHN PHILLIPS. JOHN PHILLIPS came to Congress the same day I did. He had had a very fine legislative experience in the California Legislature, in the assembly and in the senate.

JOHN PHILLIPS is a man of great courage, he is a diligent, hard worker. He wants to know what are the facts and he wants to know what is behind the discussion concerning a bill. In every way I think he is an ideal legislator.

John and Mrs. Phillips, and their children, are great friends of ours. I hope John will have a pleasant time when he retires, if that is what he is going to do. Nobody knows what he is going to do. My guess is that John is going to write a book, and if he does, I am sure it will be worth reading. I hope he sells thousands of copies through the country and makes a fortune out of it.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON].

Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to add a small word concerning my colleague, JOHN PHILLIPS. We in Cleveland feel as though we own him a little bit, because he was out there. We are particularly happy over the work that he did in the matter of securing what we had been promised, a Veterans' Hospital in Cleveland.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from California [Mr. YOUNGER].

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Speaker, I join with our colleague [Mr. UTT] in paying tribute to our colleague, JOHN PHILLIPS. I know of no one in the delegation or in the House that has been as helpful to the new congressmen as has JOHN PHILLIPS. We will miss him. California loses one of its great Representatives.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, JOHN PHILLIPS came on the Appropriations Committee soon after he came here. During all the time that he has been on it, and that covers almost all of his service, he has been a wonderful man on the committee. He knew what he was doing all the time. He was able by virtue of his ability as an economic analyst to tell just exactly what a situation was. He did a wonderful job for the committee and for the country all the way through for many years. I want to add my appreciation of that wonderful service. I wish we had more like him. The country needs that kind of service.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I take the floor to pay tribute to two Republican Congressmen, my two Republican colleagues from Michigan, JESSE WOLCOTT and GEORGE DONDERO, who are retiring from Congress. We all know of their sterling qualities. They have been told here many times today. But if I were really to tell the truth, I would say I am hoping they will be succeeded by two first-class Democrats.

The Democrats of Michigan had a party for them some time ago. We figured up that the people at the head table had had Government service for over 100 years. We hate to lose all this great thought that is associated so closely with Government. Nevertheless, we want to start fresh with two young Democrats from Michigan, and I hope we will do the best we can in that regard.

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to pay my respects to a great man, a great American, a great legislator, JOHN PHILLIPS.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks following the remarks I am about to make.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a great many able Members of the House of Representatives are retiring. The reasons for that I do not quite know about, but each one makes his decision for himself.

We, in Indiana, are losing from our delegation and the House of Representatives is losing, SHEPARD CRUMPACKER, of the Third District, one of the most able, outstanding Members of the Congress of the United States. We regret to see him leave, but since he has made that decision to leave this body, we wish him well because we know that those great attributes of ability, integrity, decency and honesty that have characterized his service here will follow him in the years to come. In whatever he chooses to do, he will find himself in good company.

Mr. UTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the many other Members of this House who have so ably paid their tribute to one of the finest men with whom it has ever been my privilege to be acquainted, the Honorable JOHN PHILLIPS, of California—a man of tolerance and understanding, a man of judgment and ability, a man whose counsel and advice has through the years been sought by all Members, and who constantly gave freely of his talents and judgment based upon many years of experience to his fellow Members.

The Congress of the United States is losing one of its most valued Members and the Members of Congress are losing one of their most valued friends in the retirement of JOHN PHILLIPS.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, JOHN PHILLIPS and I came to Congress together in January 1943. Mr. PHILLIPS was a member of the 78th Club, made up of Republican Members of Congress, and he served as one of its early presidents. We became closely associated in the affairs of the club and in our work as Members of the House of Representatives. A rich friendship developed between us.

I deeply regret that JOHN PHILLIPS is leaving the House of Representatives. He is the kind of an individual who is sorely needed in our legislative halls. JOHN PHILLIPS is a man of honor and integrity and his word is as good as his bond. He is a student of government, and whenever JOHN PHILLIPS spoke on the floor of the House he was given close attention because Members had great confidence in his opinion on legislative matters.

John was admired and respected by his colleagues and we shall all miss him in the days that lie ahead. He is indeed a Christian gentleman, and my best wishes go with him in all of his future endeavors. He deserves life's richest blessings.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, 14 eventful years have passed since JOHN PHILLIPS and I came to Congress. It has been a real privilege to serve with this alert and constructive man.

For many years my offices were across the hall from those of JOHN PHILLIPS. I observed that John was always busy serving the Nation, California, his district, and his myriad of friends. His retirement is a loss, of course, but his 14 years of diligent service is a true gain.

We wish for John and his wife, Dorothy, everything good in the future.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I came to the Congress in 1943 with JOHN PHILLIPS, and that in itself is an association which long endures; it is a certain something we have in common which breeds affection.

His service has been brilliant. With his charm of manner, his inquiring mind, his ability to express himself, and his devastating logic, he has contributed much to the cause of orderly government, and the country is better for his service.

JOHN PHILLIPS will be sorely missed by the host of friends he has made, and he will never be forgotten by those who knew him. I join with his colleagues in best wishes for the days to come, and I hope he and his gracious wife will enjoy years of happiness in the knowledge of a lifetime of fruitful service.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, when I came to Congress in January 1953, I was given the high honor of assignment to the Appropriations Committee. I think every Member should serve on that important committee. The people have the habit of blaming the Chief Executive or the administration for unnecessary and wasteful spending, but the truth is that no administration can spend a dime unless Congress authorizes it and appropriates the money. Therefore the importance of service on the Appropriations Committee cannot be overemphasized because it is that committee which scrutinizes the requests for funds and makes the recommendations that precede appropriations.

And, Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to be assigned to serve on the Independent Officers Subcommittee, a subcommittee that had the responsibility of handling appropriations for some forty-odd independent agencies and offices of the Government. The chairman of that subcommittee was the Honorable JOHN PHILLIPS, and he presided over and directed its work with impressive dignity and ability. He knew that I had never had legislative experience and that appropriations work was brand new to me. He went out of his way to give me the benefit of his experience and knowledge. I soon came to admire him as one of the outstanding Members of Congress.

In my judgment the country is losing the benefit of the services of one of its wisest and most devoted servants. I truly regret that he saw fit to retire from that service although I must confess that I do not blame him in the least for doing so. He has given his people the benefit of 14 of the best years of his life. If any man ever deserved to retire from the tremendous pressures and responsibilities under which we have to work here in Congress, on the basis of having already contributed more than one man's fair share to the preservation of our precious liberties and fundamental principles, that man is JOHN PHILLIPS.

I could not allow this occasion to pass and our paths separate, although I hope not permanently, without expressing my profound thanks to him for his leadership, for the high example he has set for those who may follow him, for his uniform courtesy to all Members, and for the friendship which he has given me. In my book, JOHN PHILLIPS is one of the truly great Americans. I shall never forget him.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my word of praise to fine service rendered by JOHN PHILLIPS during his service in this House.

He has been diligent in his inquiry of what was needed and, what was not needed, in making appropriations for the conduct of the affairs of this great Nation. In the performance of his duty he has given much time and effort. He has always had the courage of his convictions and the membership of the House has always recognized his sincerity. We honor him for the fine qualities he has shown. We will miss him. We wish him and his good wife a pleasant and happy retirement.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, as a comparatively young man I naturally look to those older than I for guidance. There are several things which appeal to a young man—personality, achievement, and all-around ability. JOHN PHILLIPS has all of these, but the thing that has attracted me to him most is his strong, moral fiber and his great character. I can think of no greater tribute to pay him than to say when I retire from this House I hope I will do so with the respect of my colleagues that JOHN PHILLIPS possesses.

Mr. UTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to join in tribute to JOHN PHILLIPS. I was standing in back of the Chamber this afternoon when another Member commented that in losing JOHN PHILLIPS, we lose one of the ablest Members of this House, one of the finest parliamentarians, one of the best informed Members with whom we have had the privilege of serving. I would like at this time to pay tribute to my colleague from Pennsylvania, KARL KING, who is also retiring from the Chamber by his own wish. We wish him the best of happiness and a full life in his home and in his district. We hope, of course, to see a worthy successor from the same side of the aisle come here to join us in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay further tribute to our colleague, Mr. CRUMPACKER, from Indiana, with whom I have served on the Committee on the Judiciary. The House will miss him very much and as one who comes from what might be called one of the more "vicissitudinous" districts, I think we are all indebted to Mr. CRUMPACKER for his candor in saying he is retiring in order to earn a more secure living.

Mr. UTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with the gentleman from California in paying tribute to a truly great American and outstanding citizen. It was my privilege to have served on the Committee on Appropriations for the past 2 years on two subcommittees on which Mr. PHILLIPS served, the Public Works Subcommittee and the Subcommittee on Independent Offices. He truly has been an outstanding Congressman and he has been a great credit to his section of the country and to the Nation at large. As a young man who came to that committee with his great experience and his kindness and his courtesy, he took me by the hand and together with Mr. THOMAS, of Texas, led me through the labyrinths of congressional appropriations where I obtained some knowledge of Government. We wish for him and his family many years of health, happiness, and prosperity.

Mr. UTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from California yielding so that I may pay tribute to my good friend from California, JOHN PHILLIPS. I have served on the Committee on Appropriations with him. He has been a great statesman and a great friend of America. I know that my country is far better because of JOHN PHILLIPS and that my sons and my grandchildren will live in a better America because of his great fight for the liberties and freedoms that we all have enjoyed.

Mr. MURRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join our colleague in paying tribute to Congressman PHILLIPS. I served with him on the Appropriations Committee.

My experience in Congress has been greatly enriched as a result of my association with such a fine legislator and wonderful gentleman as JOHN PHILLIPS.

I wish John and his family every possible success.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with all the others who have paid tribute to JOHN PHILLIPS. I know of no man who has served more ably than has JOHN PHILLIPS, and I am sorry that he is leaving. I believe every Member of this body likewise is sorry that he is leaving.

While I am here I want to say just a few words about JESSE WOLCOTT on whose committee I served for many years. He was a great chairman, and I believe it is the sense of this body that we are sorry he is leaving. The same applies to GEORGE DONDERO.

And, Mr. Speaker, in just 1 minute may I say I think we have had a very successful session of Congress. This has been one of the most constructive sessions of Congress it has been my privilege to serve in.

And while I am on my feet I want to have the honor of paying tribute to the wonderful gentleman presiding behind me. He has sat patiently in that chair from 8 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night for the last 2 weeks doing a wonderful job.

And I want to pay like tribute to the minority leader, JOE MARTIN.

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. IKARD. I would like to join with all the others in the tributes that have been paid to our colleague from California, Mr. PHILLIPS, to our colleagues from Michigan, Mr. DONDERO and Mr. WOLCOTT, also to call to the attention of the House the fact that one member of our Texas delegation is likewise leaving us, a man who has rendered a great service here, a man of ability and of great integrity, a man whom we are proud to have had as a member of our delegation. I refer to BRADY GENTRY. He has rendered a great service to his country in different positions in public life both on the State level and on the national level. I regret that he has seen fit to leave his service here. We will miss him.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARSHALL. How am I to obtain a minute's time in which to inform the House that our colleague, JOE O'HARA, of Minnesota, is recovering his health and is able now to be home?

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. PELLY. The gentleman from Washington does not want to take the time of the House, but I feel that I simply must mention one of the Members who is leaving and who we are sorry to see go. I mean JOHN PHILLIPS. In the days when I came here, in the first part of the Eisenhower administration, economy steps began to be taken and I saw the great military installations in my district fading away, but the military installations in California were being built up.

At the next election they said the gentleman from Washington was the best Congressman California ever had. JOHN PHILLIPS is a man of great ability and certainly one of the greatest Congressmen California ever had; and as we look over the years that have gone by and the years through which we have passed we can pay our respects to JOHN PHILLIPS as one of the greatest Representatives the House has ever had, and I see him go with great regret.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay my respects to those Members of the House who are leaving, one in particular, JOHN PHILLIPS. It was my privilege to be associated with him in the Breakfast Club for many years, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

In my book he is one of the ablest and finest Congressmen this House has ever had. We shall miss him, and I know we all say, "John, God speed thee."

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, my time has expired.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks at this point on the public service of the Members who are leaving us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to our fellow Members who are leaving the House of Representatives at the end of this session. I am in accord with all that has been said about each and all of them on this occasion.

I realize the time allocated for paying these tributes is limited. I do want to pay my respects, and the respects of my fellow colleagues from Kansas, to the Honorable CLIFFORD R. HOPE, of Kansas, who has joined the ranks of those who are retiring from this great body of Representatives of our country.

CLIFF HOPE served in the legislature of the great State of Kansas, where he was speaker of the house, before he came to Congress 30 years ago.

The number of years of service does not tell the whole story. Years of service is great. The kind of service he rendered is so much greater. CLIFF HOPE has been a great leader in our State. He has been one of the great men in Congress. His work in the House has been largely in the field of agriculture. Many of his proposals have been enacted into law. He has been truly the farmer's friend of this country.

CLIFF HOPE has the esteem and the confidence of the Members of the House. He knows no party lines in his efforts to serve his country.

The other members of the Kansas delegation will miss his kindly advice and his willingness to share his experience with them.

Members of this House will long remember the courteous manner with which he treated each and all of them. He differed in opinion with other Members on many occasions, but never failed to respect the other fellow's views.

CLIFF HOPE has a certain poise and fineness of character that make him outstanding among his fellow men. He is patient, but firm. He has a rare sense of justice.

We wish for CLIFF HOPE and his family the best that the future can hold. Cliff deserves it.

Mr. HILLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to join in the tribute being paid to our retiring colleagues.

It is with much sadness that we face the realization that many familiar, friendly faces will not be seen in the Hall of the House of Representatives next year.

We from California shall miss particularly our colleague, JOHN PHILLIPS, who has represented the 29th District since 1942. John has been a friend and adviser to so many of us who became Members of this body subsequent to him. His incisive power of analysis and his pleasant wit will be difficult to replace. His service as a member of the Committee on Appropriations helped save taxpayers billions of dollars. The Eisenhower administration can credit him for much of the work which made a balanced budget possible.

My best wishes to John and Mrs. Phillips as they begin a well-earned retirement.

To all others who are leaving us, good luck and Godspeed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I am highly honored indeed to have the opportunity to express my feelings and to associate myself with my colleagues who have so sincerely expressed their high regard for Congressman CLIFFORD R. HOPE, who is leaving the Congress after 30 years of service.

It is with sadness and regret that we say goodby to this great man who has so influenced agricultural legislation in the United States for more than a quarter of a century.

Congressman HOPE came into the House when we were first discussing a phase of agricultural legislation concerning price supports. This was during the days of the McNary-Haugen bill.

During my service in the House and for the past 14 years, I have served on the Committee on Agriculture, of which Mr. HOPE has either been chairman or ranking member. In this position he has had an opportunity to direct and carefully guide agricultural legislation through the committee, hearings, reports, and on the floor of the House. In every one of these positions he has discharged his obligations to his district, the State, and the country in a way that has endeared him to the hearts of all farm organizations, as well as a multitude of farm families and city consumers. Words are poor vehicles to express what this Nation, his neighbors, and his district, as well as the Members of this Congress, think of this great agricultural leader.

In the parlance of the day, he is "tops" and we shall sorely miss his counsel, his advice, and his application of his every energy to the work of agriculture to which he has directed a lifetime.

May the blessings of a kind providence guide and protect not only Congressman HOPE, but his wife and family in the days to come.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, in my lifetime I have met a great number of different men under varying conditions and circumstances, but I have never known anyone more modest and retiring than the gentleman from Kansas, CLIFFORD HOPE. Quiet in his disposition, always of an even temper, sincere and simple in his attitude, and consecrated in his service to our country, he will never be forgotten by those who know him.

CLIFF HOPE is recognized in Government as an authority on agriculture, and his views are much sought after and highly respected. Never a demagog, he won people to him by his friendly attitude, his quiet persuasion, and his logical argument. His loss to the cause of good government is very great but we can appreciate his desire for rest after the many years he has devoted to the best interests of our country. Congress is better for having had him as a Member, and I feel sure we all agree to that fact.

It is hard to think of CLIFF HOPE in retirement, and I venture the thought that he will be called on from time to time for his advice and counsel. Can anyone imagine a man better equipped to be the Secretary of Agriculture in any administration?

Whatever the future may have in store for CLIFF HOPE, I join with his host of friends in wishing him good health, happiness, and contentment.

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of CLIFF HOPE, of Kansas, from Congress brings to a close a tenure of congressional service to the Nation which I believe can best be described as one devoted to the preservation of the American system. He has performed his duties as Congressman with great integrity and energy. Without fear of contradiction it can be stated that all Kansas is proud of Cliff, they regret his leaving the Halls of Congress, but they are glad he is coming back to Kansas to stay for awhile.

One could discuss at great length the outstanding accomplishments of CLIFF HOPE. For nearly 30 years he has played a major role in the formulation of all agricultural legislation. He introduced the original domestic allotment bill, most of which is now embodied in the present farm program. He sponsored the Research and Marketing Act of 1946. This legislation is recognized as one of the greatest advancements in agricultural research since the establishment of the Department of Agriculture. He was the author of the Extension Service consolidation bill, which is an outstanding contribution to Extension Service legislation. He is an authority in the field of conservation. Another milestone in his career on the Agriculture Committee came with the passage of the act establishing the upstream watershed program. He again exhibited his outstanding ability with the passage of the Farm Credit Act of 1953, which increased the farmer ownership and control of the Federal farm credit system.

These are only a few of his many accomplishments in the field of agricultural legislation. Senator FRANK CARLSON has made an excellent presentation of CLIFF HOPE'S devotion to duty and his outstanding accomplishments. This was done in a speech given on May 3, 1956, at the testimonial dinner in honor of CLIFF HOPE given by officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture. Senator CARLSON'S speech follows:

When my close and trustworthy friend, CLIFF HOPE, told me several months ago he was retiring from public service, my reaction was one later shared by the people of his home district and farm families everywhere, one of dismay and deep regret. I still feel the hard-pressed farmers of the Nation are losing a great champion, but in all fairness I must say retirement was never more richly deserved.

Congressman HOPE has served the Fifth Congressional District of our home State through 30 of this country's most turbulent, trying and revolutionary years. He has served it in a way to win the respect and affection of his constituents and colleagues alike. He has won his place and held it because he has kept mental pace with the fast-changing times. We all recognize that many of his sound views on agriculture are of such far-sighted nature they will not be officially accepted until some future date, after his retirement. It is a sad fact that true progress is slow to evolve and that many times deserved credit is not given to men like CLIFF HOPE who tediously pioneer the way to better living.

There are many high points in his enviable 30-year career, but the ones to which CLIFF HOPE himself points with quiet pride are those concerning soil and water conservation legislation, and laws to promote agricultural research—particularly in the area of marketing research. His first major effort in this field came in 1935, when he was responsible in large measure for the original Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, the forerunner of much of the Nation's farm program today.

Another milestone came just a little more than 2 years ago with the passage of the Hope-Aiken Act to establish the small watershed program.

As chairman of the House Agriculture Committee in the 83d Congress, he also established the insured-loan program for soil and water conservation, a program which is developing slowly but which has great long-range possibilities. He is still working on better means for marketing farm products, a job which had its first major impetus with passage of the Research and Marketing Act of 1946, which he coauthored.

A newspaper in Congressman HOPE'S home district summed up his career in these words: "The most amazing facet to his career is that not since his first election has his vote-getting power been seriously challenged, nor his reputation as the friend of the farmer been seriously questioned." Truer words were never written, and I think they are a fitting testimonial to Mr. HOPE'S abilities.

Congressman HOPE entered the political arena as a representative in the Kansas Legislature in 1920. He was reelected to that post in 1922 and 1924, serving as speaker pro tempore in the 1923 session and speaker of the house in 1925–26. He has been a member of the House Committee on Agriculture continuously since entering Congress in 1927, and was chairman of this committee during the 80th and 83d Congresses. He has been the ranking Republican Member since 1932. It is truly a distinguished record of service.

Although agriculture has been his principal field, Congressman HOPE has had numerous other chores in Washington. He has served as a member of the Labor Committee and was appointed to several special committees, including the vital Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning of the 78th Congress. He visited and made economic surveys of Russia, Iran, Egypt, Greece, Italy, and most of Western Europe in 1945 in connection with this latter work.

And now the CLIFF HOPE public-service story, which had its start with a small-town plains lawyer battling his way through a tough Republican primary to become the Representative of his neighbors, is drawing to a close. The last political chapter reveals Cliff at the height of his popularity and respect, with a reputation for legislative action—particularly farm legislation—that has been consistently astute, farsighted, and fair. Even now, when he could easily taper off his heavy schedule of congressional activities in view of his announced retirement, CLIFF HOPE remains one of the most conscientious, responsible, and hard-working men on Capitol Hill. He is still keeping trust with the remarkable faith his constituents and the American farmer have shown him.

I, for one, will sorely miss his wise counsel and personal friendship here on Capitol Hill. And I am convinced that in the years ahead we all will realize more fully what major contributions he has made to the economic welfare of the Nation.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, CLIFF HOPE, more than any other living American, has been a true champion of the farmers of our great land.

During my 14 years of service in the Congress, it has been my privilege to have had counsel with CLIFF HOPE many times. Always he was patient, courteous, and constructive. We have worked together on many projects and, under his leadership—and with his ability to work with everyone, regardless of partisan or sectional conviction, numerous successes have come to the good of American agriculture. It is a proud record that CLIFFORD HOPE leaves through 30 years of conscientious work.

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, agriculture and farmers throughout our great country lost a trusted and true friend when the Honorable CLIFFORD HOPE announced his retirement from the Congress.

While I am on the opposite side of the political fence I have always found Mr. HOPE to be most sympathetic to the problems of agriculture irrespective of any political implications. He was always kind, courteous, and patient and on a number of occasions I have counseled with him when he was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I found his advice most constructive and his friendship I have valued.

Mr. HOPE has compiled an enviable record in the Congress, and he more than any living American has been a true champion of the farmer.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, the announcement by Hon. CLIFFORD HOPE, of Kansas, that he will not seek reelection to Congress and that he is retiring at the end of this session to enter the private practice of law prompts me to make a brief statement concerning his service in Congress.

Mr. HOPE has served with honor and distinction for a period of 30 years. During all of this time he has been a member of the House Committee on Agriculture. Since 1932 he has been the ranking Republican on that committee, and in 1947–48 and 1953–54 he served as chairman.

For 18 of the 30 years that Mr. HOPE has been a member of the Committee on Agriculture it has been my privilege to be associated with him in the work of that committee. In all of the history of the Committee on Agriculture I doubt if anyone has ever equaled CLIFF HOPE'S contributions to the welfare of American agriculture.

His decision to retire is a great loss to farmers in every State in the Union. He represented a great wheat producing district and always fought for the interests of the people who elected him, but his interests in agriculture were not limited to his district and he worked unceasingly to improve the farmer's economic position in all areas of agricultural production. His wise counsel and sound reasoning on agricultural questions will be sorely missed in the Committee on Agriculture.

As he returns to the active practice of law in Garden City, Kans., I wish for him abounding success and complete happiness.

Mr. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, my State of Michigan is suffering a serious loss in the retirement from Congress, after this session of two of her most respected and ablest public servants, Congressman JESSE WOLCOTT, of Port Huron, representing the 7th Congressional District, and Congressman GEORGE DONDERO, of Royal Oak, representing the 18th district.

JESSE WOLCOTT, the dean of our congressional delegation, is known as one of the most brilliant men in the House of Representatives. In the field of his specialty, the work of the Committee on Banking and Currency, his reputation was outstanding. Jesse rarely spoke on the House floor except in connection with his own committee's legislation and when he did, he was recognized as an expert on his own pet subject. To the newer Members of the House, especially those of us from Michigan, he freely gave of his time, his wise counsel, and patient assistance. He will leave a very large and very real gap here on Capitol Hill.

GEORGE DONDERO is one of the kindliest and most warm-hearted persons it has ever been my good fortune to know. His qualities as a gentleman were only rivaled by those as a patriot. His love for and knowledge of history and traditions of our great country were always a constant source of inspiration. In his own Public Works Committee, his years of tireless work were finally capped by the approval of the St. Lawrence Seaway which promises to mean much to Michigan and which reflects so much deserved credit upon him. George was regarded by many of us with real affection and his retirement will also mean the loss of a devoted public servant.

It is a very real blow to the National Government and to the State of Michigan to lose at the same time two men of the caliber of Congressmen WOLCOTT and DONDERO. I join my colleagues in wishing for them both a long and well-deserved retirement and a hope that all the good and rich things of life may be theirs for many years.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, our good friend and colleague, VICTOR WICKERSHAM, will be missed by his many friends in Congress. I came to know him very well in the days immediately following World War II. We were members of a special committee which visited a great many of the war-torn countries in order to see first-hand the magnitude of the task of rebuilding a world so gravely wounded by all-out war. The able gentleman from Oklahoma is a confirmed enthusiast, optimist, and a believer that all things turn out for the best in the end. VICTOR WICKERSHAM well represented the people of the Sixth District of Oklahoma during the years he served them in Congress. He is sure to succeed in whatever he chooses to take up as his work in the future. He carries the good wishes of his colleagues, and I shall miss his pleasant smile and the warmth of his friendship.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words for my distinguished friend and colleague, the Honorable EDWARD P. BOLAND, of Massachusetts, who serves with me on the Appropriations Committee.

For 2 years I have had occasion to watch his work. During that time I have learned to admire and respect him for his enormous capacity for work and for his keen, alert mind. He grasps the problems which we work with in committee with an understanding that oftentimes amazes all of us.

The people of the great State of Massachusetts and the people of his district are very fortunate to have representing them a man of Congressman BOLAND'S fine moral character, general alertness, and ability to get a job done well.

He is one of the outstanding members of our committee and of the Congress. As the years go on we shall hear of Congressman BOLAND'S ever-increasing achievements.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the House will lose one of its most able Members in the next session because THOMAS J. DODD has decided to seek election to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DODD is respected by every Member of this House and everyone who came to know him intimately as I did. He is held in highest esteem because of his unusual qualities of leadership, together with his sense of fairness and justice. During the 83d Congress it was my pleasure to serve on the Select Committee To Investigate Communist Aggression. Mr. DODD was also a member of that well known select committee. This gave me an opportunity to work very closely with Mr. DODD and to observe firsthand his keen grasp and understanding of the worldwide struggle between the forces of human freedom and those totalitarian forces which seek to enslave all mankind. His experience as chief trial lawyer during the trial of the Nazi leaders gave him an unusual comprehension of the terrible crimes against humanity committed by the Russian Communists. He has long advocated the establishment of an International Juridical Commission so that the crimes against humanity committed by the real tyrants of Moscow may be recorded, and so that all free men may accordingly be warned that so long as any segment of humanity is exploited and enslaved, the liberty and dignity of all mankind stands in mortal danger.

We will all miss our colleague, THOMAS J. DODD, and we wish him continued success in the great work he has been doing as I am certain he will take it up with equal vigor and determination when he begins to serve his term in the Senate.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, a close friend and colleague of mine during my two terms in the House is leaving this body. I refer to the distinguished Representative from the First District of Connecticut, THOMAS J. DODD.

Representing, as I do, the neighboring Second District of Massachusetts, I am particularly aware of the service that TOM DODD has rendered to the people of the great State of Connecticut and to the Nation as a whole.

I have known him to be a man who thinks out problems long and well and then forms determined convictions. I have known him as a man who has shown a rare courage and a rare talent in fighting for his convictions. I have known him as a man whose sincerity and eloquence on the floor of the House has caused many of us to readily follow his leadership on many of the vital issues of our day.

On July 7 in Hartford, Conn., at the Democratic State convention, TOM DODD was nominated to the office of United States Senator from Connecticut. His name was placed in nomination by a distinguished former Member of the House, and now Governor of Connecticut, Abraham A. Ribicoff.

The political philosophy of these two men, who have been so singularly honored by the people of Connecticut, is reflected in their remarks to the convention delegates. The principles for which they stand and the creed in which they believe are part and parcel of the great political party that numbers both Governor Ribicoff and Congressman DODD among its most outstanding leaders.

Mr. Speaker, it is upon this philosophy, this creed, and these principles that our colleague the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], has offered himself as a candidate for United States Senator from Connecticut.

Under unanimous consent, I include in the RECORD Governor Ribicoff's nominating address and Congressman DODD'S acceptance speech:

ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE ABRAHAM A. RIBICOFF, GOVERNOR OF CONNECTICUT, AT THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION PLACING THE NAME OF CONGRESSMAN THOMAS J. DODD IN NOMINATION FOR THE OFFICE OF UNITED STATES SENATOR

Politicians are a superstitious lot. I remember during the last campaign for the governorship, many of you gave me good-luck charms.

Before the campaign was over, my pockets were weighted down with four-leaf clovers and good-luck medals and a rabbit foot or two. And frankly, I carried them with me through the entire campaign. Two years ago on this platform, when I was nominated for the office of governor by this convention, I wore a gray suit and a gray and black tie, and I felt that that was sort of a lucky suit for the Democratic Party 2 years ago. I went up to the attic and got that same gray suit and that same gray and black tie and I am wearing it on the platform today. I hope it brings the same luck to our nominee.

We are assembled here today to nominate the next United States Senator from the State of Connecticut.

There are few offices in this land, or as a matter of fact, there are few offices anywhere in the world that can compare with the importance of the office of the United States Senate.

When our Constitution was first adopted and when our Republic was in its infancy, the United States Senate had a different meaning than it has today.

The House of Representatives was of the people. The House of Representatives was an elective office.

The concept of the United States Senate was a group of dignified men of great honor, who were chosen by legislatures. It was many years, many, many years before you had direct elections by the people to the United States Senate. And for some 30 years, in the infancy of our Nation, the United States Senate was a more or less honorary, but meaningless body.

Then the United States Senate, due to the impact and the growth of America, because of the type of men that it was attracting, became a very important body.

And I dare say, if you recall the history of the United States, there are many United States Senators whose names and deeds are in your minds when you find it difficult to name and think of many men who served in the Presidency of the United States.

The United States Senate has become and is a powerful position. The United States Senate now not only has significance to the people of this State and the people of the Nation, but the United States Senate has significance today for the entire free world.

We in Connecticut have sent great Democratic Senators to the United States Senate. In recent years we have had distinguished men like Gus Lonergan, Francis Maloney, Bill Benton, and that great man, Brien McMahon.

As a matter of fact, this would have been the time for that nomination to have come back. I recall, when I was in Washington, the great influence that Senator McMahon wielded in the affairs of our Nation and the affairs of the entire world, because in the matter of international relations, in the matter of appropriations, the United States Senate is a very, very important body. And, therefore, it behooves us today to send a man to the United States Senate who can carry on in those great traditions and play his role, not only on the floor of the United States Senate, but, indeed, to be spokesman for the free world in the United States Senate to the entire world.

The United States Senate is a peculiar position, too. My concept of a man to go to the United States Senate is this: Technically, a Senator, while he represents the State of Connecticut in Washington, is also a Senator for the entire United States. And I would be very disappointed if this convention nominated a man who is narrow in outlook, whose concepts are restricted and confined, and who failed to exercise leadership that went beyond the borders of his own State and only the interests of the State and failed to encompass the interests of our entire Nation.

A United States Senator must be a man of courage, and this may be a strange thing to say, but a United States Senator must be a man who can be lonely, a man who can withstand pressures, a man who may often have to say no to the leadership of his own party, and a man who on occasion may have to go into the face of temporary public opinion as it may be mobilized on an emotional basis.

A United States Senator must have a historical perspective. A United States Senator must have breadth. A United States Senator must have a philosophy. And a United States Senator must have the courage to face an issue and a great deal of loneliness, and often, as I say, against fleeting public opinion as he may find it on any special occasion.

A United States Senator not only must represent the State of Connecticut, in the Halls of the United States Senate, but a United States Senator must from time to time come back to the State of Connecticut and explain to the people of this State what the basic problems are that face the Nation and face the world.

He must be in a position to mold public opinion. He must be in a position to mobilize public opinion. And he must interpret the world and the United States to his own people.

Now I am satisfied that the man that I am going to nominate today fulfills those qualifications.

All of us realize that today one of the great struggles in this world is that between freedom and slavery, between democracy and tyranny. This great struggle is not one of short duration. This struggle now has been going on since 1917 and this struggle will continue on for many, many more years. It is long; it is difficult; and it is arduous.

It is important that the man that we nominate understands the perspective of freedom and a perspective of tyranny.

The man we are to nominate knows tyranny; he knows dictatorship. He has played the prime role in the Nazi tyranny that preceded in power on a worldwide basis the one we are struggling with today. He met this situation face to face on the Nuremburg trials. This man understands the present tyranny of worldwide godless communism.

As an FBI agent, as a special assistant United States attorney, as Assistant Attorney General, and in Congress and out of Congress he has been the leader in the understanding of the position of the free world and what must be done and what has to be done if democracy and freedom should be preserved, not only for the United States of America, but for the entire world. I am satisfied that the man we are going to nominate today fulfills that qualification to the utmost limits.

But not all the problems that a United States Senator deals with are in the international field.

You heard an outstanding speech last night, and you heard an outstanding Senator mention the programs and great policies of Woodrow Wilson, of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Harry S. Truman.

You understood that here was founded a party with principles that had brought to fruition and success great economic and social reforms for the benefit of all the people of the United States.

So solid and so accepted have these social and economic reforms become that when the Republicans came to power in 1952 they dared not, nor did they advocate, nor did they try to eliminate any of them, because the American people know, respect, and live by these great economic and social reforms that have done so much for the benefit of our entire Nation.

TOM DODD understands these things. TOM DODD is a liberal and progressive in the true sense of the word. He understands the position of America on the domestic scene. His voice was raised against the tideland oil grab. He understands the State's problem on flood insurance and flood control where he has been a strong and ardent advocate in the Halls of the House.

He understands the problems of the aged. He understands the problems of housing. He understands the problems of labor. And he understands the problems of old age and social security.

We have here a man whose domestic record has been one of success. We have here a man who has been successful in understanding the great international problems.

What else do we have? We have a man whom all of us know. Born and bred in the State of Connecticut, his years, both formative and mature, have been spent in this State.

He was born in Norwich, educated in their local schools, a graduate of Yale University, a practicing member of the bar, and twice United States Representative from the First Congressional District; a lovely wife, understanding, intelligent, charming, a true mother, and a great helpmate; six bright children with shining Connecticut faces, who are indeed a credit to our candidate and a great asset. And, indeed, I think that I would underestimate his political astuteness were he not to show this wonderful wife and family of his to the electorate during the next couple of months.

The Democratic Party is going to win in November.

The Democratic Party is going to elect a United States Senator.

The candidate we are going to nominate has a lot of work to do. Believe me, no one is going to win an election in the State of Connecticut just by using the mechanical means. The candidate whom the Democratic Party nominates has the obligation to go up and down the highways and byways of this State to make his views known and the views of the Democratic Party, and I am confident that our candidate is that type of campaigner. And I am confident that each and every one of us will be in there fighting for him, working for him, and helping him to victory.

Ladies and gentlemen and fellow delegates, I give you the Democratic nominee and the next Senator to the United States Senate from the State of Connecticut, the Honorable THOMAS J. DODD, of West Hartford.

ACCEPTANCE SPEECH OF CONGRESSMAN THOMAS J. DODD OF THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT, JULY 7, 1956

Fellow Democrats and friends, I accept humbly and gratefully the honor you have given to me.

I am well aware of the challenge that we face. I am a Democrat who was born and raised in Connecticut. My father and my grandfather were Democrats in Connecticut so I know something about the task which confronts our party in every election year. There was a time when the odds were almost always overwhelmingly against us. But in recent years our State has shown a disposition to select Democrats with considerable frequency. As I stand on this platform today I think of some of the great Democrats from Connecticut who have served in the United States Senate during my lifetime.

I can see the honest and generous face of Augustine Lonergan.

I can hear the wise and eloquent words of Francis T. Maloney.

I can feel the strong personality and brilliant intellect of Brien McMahon and happily, in our midst I see the friendly and courageous Senator Bill Benton.

These are great Democrats who in recent years have represented Connecticut in the United States Senate.

The opportunity to follow and carry on in the tradition which they have established fills me with a sense of grave responsibility.

The campaign which we start today will result in a victory for us in November. The signs of this victory are all around us, although obscured somewhat by political propaganda.

During the last 2 years the voters of Connecticut have given ample evidence of their interest in the Democratic Party. Our great Governor, a Democrat, directs the policy of this State. Every major city is headed by a Democratic mayor. Town after town, some of which had never been Democratic before, have joined the growing list of Democratic strongholds.

These are reasons for encouragement. But to insure victory we will work together until every vote has been counted. Today our party is united and strong. The first and greatest credit for this unity and strength is due to the great leadership of our State chairman, John M. Bailey, and to his associates on the State Central Committee.

All that remains to be done is for us to talk facts in this campaign and to tell the people the truth about the issues which confront us.

For it is my deep conviction that a Democratic victory this fall is essential to the welfare of our Nation and to the security of the world at large.

For nearly 4 years I have been privileged to serve as a Member of Congress and I have watched with growing apprehension as our national administration falls more and more under the control of big money and big business.

Big oil has won its tidelands fight.

Big gas has only temporarily been delayed in fulfilling its avaricious ambition to reap high profits from the gas-consuming public. I say only temporarily delayed for the President vetoed the gas bill because of shameful lobbying tactics, but significantly, in his veto he said nothing about the evil of the legislation itself.

The corporate profits of big business go and and up every day. Special privileges are given away every day. Many of our natural resources are just handed over to private profit seekers. The hard-money boys still have the controlling voice in Washington and through all of this the small-business man, the salaried individual, the wage earner and the professional people have been completely forgotten.

The only tax relief has been given to a special and privileged group in our society while the rest of us carry a tax burden that is heavier than it has ever been in the history of our country during peacetime and there is no interest in the administration to reduce it.

Here close at hand in New England we see our textile industries languishing in the face of Government indifference. We see enticements in the form of tax exemptions being used to lure industries from our State and region and the tragedy is that nothing is being done by the Federal Government to help us keep them here. Very recently an administration sponsored proposal to geographically disburse industries was pushed through Congress. There are strange and sinister shadows on this measure which may take on harmful form and substance for us in Connecticut.

The voice of labor has been without influence in the halls of the Federal Government, for the hopes and aspirations of working men and women have been drowned out by the more powerful and politically persuasive voice of big business.

We live in an uneasy prosperity. Our people sense that all is not as well as it appears to be on the surface. For most of the blessing of this prosperity have been reserved for a favored few. Our economic structure is topheavy.

We have a barrage of words on the ever acute problem of civil rights—but no action. The Department of Justice has the means and the power to move right now on civil rights. I know whereof I speak because I was privileged to serve as assistant chief of the first civil rights section established by the then Attorney General during a Democratic administration almost 20 years ago. We pioneered in this field in fighting intolerance and bigotry in the Deep South and in the Far West. It is a fact of history that under a Democratic administration, we tried more civil rights cases in the United States than at any other comparable time in the history of the United States.

That fight which we undertook has for all practical purposes been abandoned. No longer do we hear of civil rights prosecutions against those who violate the constitutional privileges of Negroes. No more do we hear of litigation to protect the rights of organized labor. It is a long time since we have heard of Government activities to protect minority groups. But the great and good work which we started must be carried on and expanded if we are to fulfill the promises of our own democracy and set an example of freedom, of liberty and of justice for the people of the world. For we cannot sell democracy abroad, we cannot preach fairness or equality of opportunity in distant places if we do not enforce justice at home.

While talking big about civil rights this same administration tried to force legislation through Congress which would allow the Federal police to tap your telephone wires and listen to your private conversations. I am proud of the fact that I fought that vicious grasp for power and helped to defeat that proposal in Congress.

Two days ago in Congress, legislation which would have provided necessary Federal assistance in the field of public education was defeated. The significance of the vote by which that necessary legislation was lost lies in the fact that 119 Democrats voted for the bill while only 75 Republicans supported it and 119 Republicans, almost exclusively from Northern States, joined 105 southern Democrats in voting against the bill. This cynical performance on a matter as essential to our national welfare in and of itself is enough to indicate the necessity of a Democratic victory in November. The truth of the matter is that the national administration has given only lip service to assistance for public education. So, as well in the field of public housing, in social security, in public health, this administration has not advanced an original idea but rather has dragged its feet and grudgingly continued, because it feared to do otherwise, the great social and economic programs given to this Nation by the Democratic Party.

Thus in domestic affairs after nearly 4 years the pattern is clear. That pattern is one of extraordinary and inordinate concern about big money and big business and a poor-cousin approach to the problems of the average American citizen.

The opportunity to reverse this trend and to put this Nation back on the high road of social conscience moving toward the improved welfare of people awaits us.

This is an historic opportunity which we Democrats have in this decisive election year.

This is the opportunity to elect candidates who believe that people are entitled to decent homes in which to live, to a fair chance to earn a living with reasonable security against the disasters of illness, injury, and the infirmities and insecurities of old age.

These are the first interests of the Democratic Party because we believe that human beings are more important than anything else.

These social programs are the handwork of those who have a passion for social justice and they must not be entrusted to those who do not really believe them to be of first importance.

What of our foreign policy? What has happened to our former position of leadership and influence throughout the world?

The great battle of our age is that of freedom against tyranny.

The great evil of our times is that of communism.

The frightening facts are that communism has continued to spread across the world and it has more influence now than it had 4 years ago. As we look out on the world we see a divided and restless Korea. In the northern half the Communists continue to build up power and strength for aggressive purposes.

We see Asia, whose people are slowly but certainly deserting us for the soft blandishments of the Communists.

We see a divided Indochina where in the north again the Communists build up mightily for purposes of attack and conquest.

We see Germany still divided.

We see a major crisis developing in the Middle East.

Soviet and Iron Curtain arms are pouring into Egypt. Egypt has recognized Red China. Nasser flouts the United States while he embraces the Bulganin-Khrushchev-Chou En-lai axis. Nasser has announced that he will soon visit Communist China, accompanied by a military mission to Peiping.

Syria is flirting with the Communist world and has recognized Red China. Moreover, she is negotiating an agreement for the purchase of arms from the Communist bloc.

And in the face of this growing danger in the Middle East we have no policy but one of wait and see.

The enslaved peoples of Eastern Europe have been told to hope, to trust in the free world, and in the leadership of the United States. These nations in bondage, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary, have been told to keep faith in us and our democratic creed. But they are beginning to despair of our sincerity and steadfastness. They find that the benefits they have received from the wily, ingratiating policies of the Kremlin have been more valuable than our words. The Kremlin knows how to move for purely propaganda reasons to confuse and divide, and—unless we stop it—ultimately to conquer.

Within a matter of the last few days the Polish people of Poznan gave a lesson in freedom for all the world. That lesson is that there is no price too great to pay for liberty.

Many of the people of Connecticut have living ties with the captive peoples of Europe. They know full well the price that has been paid, and is being paid, because of our State Department and its lack of policies. Time has not been on our side, as some administration leaders try to tell us. Time has robbed us of prestige and power. Time has weakened our friendships abroad. It has spread suspicion and dissatisfaction.

Only a change of administration can correct this faltering, inept policy. Only a return to a strong bipartisan foreign policy can restore us to our former position in the eyes of the world.

I propose to discuss these issues in every part of the State of Connecticut during this campaign. I promise you that I will work tirelessly from now until election day and that I will tell the truth to the people of our State.

I expect to run on my record, on my record as a Member of Congress, and on my lifetime record in resisting tyranny, in fighting for civil rights, the battle for social justice and for peace.

I invite my opponent to discuss my record as I expect to discuss his.

The people of Connecticut are entitled to a discussion of our respective records and to know where we stand on every issue which confronts this Nation.

I now suggest to my Republican opponent that he and I publicly debate these issues before the people of Connecticut. I am sure that we can mutually arrange for radio and television coverage and that we can work out a schedule which will bring these debates to every section of this State. If my opponent is willing to do this the campaign will be more clear, more effective, and less expensive.

In former years it was an accepted practice for competing candidates to appear in public on the same platform and to discuss the same issues. There is no reason why this good practice should not be revived and I hope and expect that my opponent will accept this invitation.

Finally, I thank all of you for the work that you have done throughout the years in the interest of the Democratic Party and in the United States of America. As your candidate for the United States Senate this year I can look you in the eye and say that as a United States Senator I will wear no man's collar.

I am beholden to no special interests nor to any pressure group.

I have made no promises, no commitments of any kind.

However, I made one promise to you and to the voters of Connecticut and that is that as a Member of the United States Senate I shall at all times honestly and energetically do my best to improve the lot of people and to raise the standard of living at home and to work for peace in the world. God willing, the opportunity to fulfill this promise will be given on election day.

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to say a few words about my very good friend, the Honorable THURMOND CHATHAM. While we in Texas are always accused of not being able to speak of anything but Texas, it is not unlike speaking of Texans when you speak of THURMOND CHATHAM. His characteristics of warmheartedness and congeniality made him one of the most popular Members of this body.

It was my good fortune to have been closely associated with him during my tenure of office in this legislative body and I know of the great service he rendered as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee which legislated not only for the people of North Carolina, but our whole Nation.

I am sure that he will be sadly missed in the forthcoming Congress by all that knew him and I hope that the people of the Fifth District of North Carolina see fit to return him to us sometime in the future.

THE HONORABLE BRADY GENTRY

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the House that I wish I had the time to pay tribute to all of the Members who are leaving at the expiration of this session. I am going to confine my remarks to BRADY GENTRY and I want you to know that my remarks apply to all of you who are leaving.

There is much I could say about Brady at this time, so much that it would take many, many minutes to do so. But if there ever was a man who did full justice to a term, it is BRADY GENTRY. We are sorry to lose him and we will all miss him.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay just and due tribute to a member of the Texas delegation who is retiring this year. He is our good friend and able colleague, the Honorable BRADY GENTRY, of Tyler, Tex. Brady has spent many years in public service and enjoys the deepest and most profound respect of all with whom he has dealt during his fine service. It was his honor and privilege to serve as county judge of Smith County, Tex., for a number of years. During this tenure of office he so deeply impressed the people with his sincerity of purpose, his fine character, his unswerving honesty, and his keen ability that he was subsequently named as a member of the Highway Commission of the State of Texas. At the time Brady was serving in this capacity, many decisions of great import had to be made. Decisions that could have shaken the very foundations of the State government had the wrong course been pursued. Decisions that affected the lives and interests of people throughout the entire Southwest. But let it be said that BRADY GENTRY, without fear or favor, walked a straight line down the middle of the road, yielding neither to influence on the one side nor emotions on the other. It was during a time that tried the souls of men, but the fine character of BRADY GENTRY stood out like a beacon in the night, and by reason thereof, Texans and their children in the years to come were the benefactors. Brady continued this course of conduct when he was honored by election to the House of Representatives of the United States. And the record that is now written of his activities in the Congress is full evidence of his independent thinking and his desire to preserve and perpetuate the fundamental principles upon which this great country was founded and upon which it must survive.

Brady chose voluntarily to retire from further Government service. We all hope that his departure from these ranks will not take him away so that his fine counsel and advice will be lost to those of us who valued it so highly.

There are so many compliments that could be paid Brady that time and space will not permit, so let me say in conclusion that I hope he and his many friends will understand how I feel when I say that, if there was ever a man whose life and work do justice to the term, "a gentleman and a scholar," it is BRADY GENTRY, of Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in RECORD on the service of BRADY GENTRY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, a popular article which appears from time to time in a national magazine is entitled "The Most Interesting Person I Have Ever Met." I think if I had to name a Member of Congress whom I have known during the 14 years I have served here who more nearly fits into that description I would name BRADY GENTRY, of Texas.

It is my desire to pay a brief tribute to him. After serving here for only 4 years he is retiring voluntarily this year. Indeed an unusually large number of the most able and outstanding Members of this body are retiring, and that certainly constitutes a great loss to the Nation.

BRADY GENTRY is one of those. He has become recognized as one of the very best informed and one of the hardest working Members of the House. Being a prolific reader and a lifelong student of government, his intimate knowledge of historic events and their true significance is almost uncanny. And that is true not only in regard to government. It is true of a wide variety of subjects that deal with practically every phase of life.

Brady is a native of Van Zandt County, Tex. As a Texan, he is endowed with many of the fine qualities which characterized the great patriots who preceded him in the Lone Star State. He graduated from Cumberland University Law School, Tennessee. His yen for politics and public service was shown early in life. At the age of 19 he was serving as city secretary-treasurer of his hometown of Tyler. He was a prosecutor for 4 years, county judge for 8 years, and then by appointment from the Governor was chairman of the State highway commission for 6 years.

It is said that during those 6 years he traveled, mostly at his own expense, into every one of the 254 counties of Texas and over practically every mile of its vast highway network. In that background of intimate knowledge of roads and the transportation needs, he put to use his vast storehouse of knowledge gained from his studies and travels and became a guiding factor in triggering the expansion of a vast interstate roadbuilding program which has become one of the very best highway systems in America.

During his tenure on the State highway commission, GENTRY was elected president of the American Association of State Highway Officials. In that capacity he traveled into nearly every State in the Union, met and counseled with local, State, and regional groups everywhere—people interested in better roads and better planning. In that manner he qualified himself for transcontinental road planning and became widely recognized as an authority on that subject.

In a recent conversation with Mr. C. D. Curtiss, Commissioner of the Bureau of Public Roads, the Commissioner reminded me of the great contribution which GENTRY made to the cause of good roads in America. It was pointed out to me that then, in 1944, GENTRY plugged hard for the initiation of a comprehensive interstate system which, if begun then, would have been a very timely and proper forerunner of the more recent action by Congress in approving a huge construction program. GENTRY foresaw the vast development of transportation needs in the march of our Nation's economy, with more and more of it geared to trucks and automobiles.

That serves as a tribute to GENTRY'S vision and wisdom. If his advice had been followed then the Nation would have had a more orderly and gradual development, and at a much lower cost. Many billions of dollars would have been saved and perhaps with better roads thousands of lives would have been spared by reduced highway accidents. Moreover, the earlier initiation of the highway-construction program, on a scale envisioned by GENTRY, would have stimulated the Nation's industrial progress and economic well-being.

I believe it fair to say that while serving in Congress Brady has made more personal friends, both Democrats and Republicans, than most any other single Member. As a member of the Public Works Committee he was a principal architect of the better features of the highway construction bill, recently enacted. He fought hard for certain improvements, some of which were adopted, some defeated. What is certain is that whatever he advocated was the result of careful study and was based upon a sincere desire to better serve the Nation's welfare.

BRADY GENTRY has not been a party hack or a narrow party-liner. He has always put the country first and political considerations have always been secondary with him. What greater tribute can be paid to any man? As a true patriot, a brilliant student of government and of public affairs, an uncompromising defender of the philosophy of free enterprise, Brady has, with becoming modesty and humility, performed his job in the Congress well.

May his future be blessed with good health, happiness, and the realization of those things in life and in government which are so dear to his heart.

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to one of the members of our own Texas delegation who is retiring from the Congress this year, the Honorable BRADY GENTRY. Mr. GENTRY has had a lifetime of public service, holding various offices within the State of Texas prior to his being elected to the House of Representatives.

It was my pleasure to have served with him during his first term of office on the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs. His sincerity of purpose, his honesty, and integrity made him a most valued member of that committee, and I regretted very much that he resigned from the committee at the outset of the 84th Congress at which time I was elevated to the post of chairman. It would have been a pleasure to have had him serve with me.

His work with the Public Works Committee on the recently enacted Federal Aid Highway Act was most valuable as his prior public service covered a number of years on the Texas Highway Commission which gave him a keen insight to the problems of the State in highway construction and maintenance.

I wish for him the best of everything in his future life and I for one am sorry to see him leave this legislative body.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to frame all of one's feelings toward another in words. Insofar as I am able, however, I want to pay my tribute to a true statesman, BRADY GENTRY. The accolade of statesman is richly deserved in this instance, and though I wish this occasion had not arisen, I relish the opportunity to pay this highest compliment of all to a fellow Congressman.

It is difficult, as we all know, not to bow at times to political expediency. BRADY GENTRY has never given way at any time, to my knowledge, to political expediency. I know this as a fact because I have been fortunate enough to work with him on two subcommittees of the Public Works Committee. Our efforts there plus work in the House, where our attendance records parallel each other, has permitted such frequent association that I know Brady's voting record and the principles underlying this record. He is a gentleman, scholar, and statesman of the old school. Old-fashioned in the sense that he epitomizes the abiding principles that do not change, being honest, sincere, straightforward, conscientious, and hard-working beyond question.

BRADY GENTRY's departure from Congress is a great loss to our country. His voluntary withdrawal, while in keeping with his ideology, is very disappointing to his friends, including myself.

I recognize in Brady a kinship of belief that goes far beyond and transcends party politics, and for this reason I admire and esteem him, and value his friendship. Only in Congress can such a relationship exist between men, I suppose. The politics, conflicting pressures, demanding decisions, and ceaseless round of work—all create a way of life in which each man is tested and tests his fellow Congressmen in a way that builds a different relationship than I have ever previously experienced. In this congressional world, my association with BRADY GENTRY has been a rewarding experience, for I have seen reflected in him and in his conduct the principles in which I believe. Brady, you will be missed in Congress.

While I might attempt to say much more, probably little could be added where words somehow seem inadequate. I simply wish Brady Godspeed and happiness in the days ahead and that his continued success reflect the rewards he so richly deserves. When I leave this Congress, I would like others to feel about me the respect which I feel for BRADY GENTRY.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, many kind and impressive remarks have been made here today about one of our valued Members from Texas who is not seeking reelection and will not be with us when Congress reconvenes next January. I refer to the Congressman from the Third District of Texas, BRADY GENTRY.

BRADY GENTRY's office is directly across the hall from mine in the Old House Office Building, and by reason of that fortunate circumstance, I came to know him well. During the early months of this, my first term, I had many occasions to seek the advice and assistance of other Members of Congress. BRADY GENTRY was always willing to be of assistance to a freshman Member. I was immediately impressed with his ability, integrity, and dedication to the principles in which he believes.

Brady is, above all, a sincere and deeply modest and humble man. Despite an illustrious career in the public service in his State and to his Nation in this Chamber, his biography in the Congressional Directory states simply "BRADY GENTRY, Democrat, of Texas.

Mr. Speaker, in these closing hours of the session, I shall not follow the lead of others who have spoken here in detailed praise of Brady's accomplishments. I do want to say, in all sincerity, that I shall miss him in Congress, and I am sure that his colleagues from the State of Texas and his colleagues on both sides of the aisle are going to miss his presence here.

I am confident that the people of the Third District of Texas are also going to miss the helpfulness and the devotion to duty of BRADY GENTRY, who, through these years he has served them, has followed without equivocation or compromise the deep-seated convictions which he believes are in the best interests of our Nation, and of his district.

BRADY GENTRY is a fighter for his principles. His choice not to seek reelection will not change these convictions. I am confident, therefore, that he will continue in whatever position he may attain to advocate and practice a line of thinking and action which will keep America strong and American. He will persist in his devotion to the principles of our Constitution and our Nation's great past and bright future. I know that the entire Congress joins me when I say, "Good luck, BRADY GENTRY. Thanks for your fine work and thanks for your friendship."

THE HONORABLE IRWIN D. DAVIDSON

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, while the country will no doubt be rejoicing that this Congress has now completed, successfully completed, its work, many of us must voice a word of sorrow that many of our friends who will be leaving us as this day closes will not be back again with us in the next session.

Among those who will not return, out of his own willingness, is our very good friend from New York [IRWIN D. DAVIDSON]. He came here after a distinguished career in the New York State Legislature. He served as a judge of one of our local courts and has served brilliantly in this session of the Congress. Beginning next January he will commence service on one of the highest courts of New York State. We all know he will serve with distinction.

When he came here to the Congress he brought with him a tremendous sense of humor, a keen intellect and great ability and capacity for work.

We will miss him as we will miss all of the others who will not return to the next session.

We wish him and them and their families God's greatest gift, happiness in the work of their choice.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to express my keen regret at the leaving of IRWIN D. DAVIDSON from this Chamber. He came to us after an enviable career as a judge of the Court of Special Sessions in the city of New York. He is returning to the courts to assume an even higher station in our judicial system in New York. He will wear the ermine of judicial office as a judge of the Court of General Sessions, which is the equivalent to our highest court of general jurisdiction in New York.

He earned our esteem during his short term here by dint of his personality and character. I shall personally miss him as colleague and friend. I shall miss his kindliness, his rich and rare humor, his trenchant remarks that often lit up an otherwise dark situation, his keenness of perception, his felicitous turn of expression.

Irwin wears well. The more one knows him the greater respect one has for him.

May good healh and happiness ever attend him.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks on the service of the Honorable IRWIN D. DAVIDSON.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, Hon. IRWIN D. DAVIDSON, our good friend and colleague, will not be with us next year, as he has received the nomination for judge of the court of general sessions of the county of New York. We are certain of his victory in the election, and although we are unhappy about his leaving us, we are pleased that this new honor has come to him.

Before coming to Congress in 1955, Judge DAVIDSON had rendered outstanding service in numerous official capacities in the State of New York. He served in the State legislature with distinction; in 1948 he became a justice of the court of special sessions in New York City where he served most ably until he left the bench to come to the House of Representatives. He is much loved and highly respected; he has always given unselfishly of his time and talents to many civic and communal affairs.

In Congress, he has proved himself to be a fine statesman and he has discharged his duties here with great ability and conscientiousness. The people of the 20th District of New York have been fortunate in having him serve as their Representative.

Representative DAVIDSON has made many friends among us and he has earned the respect of all who know him. We shall miss him very much, for we have found him to be a man of fine character, a good companion, and true friend. It is with deep regret that we see him leave these Halls; we wish him many years of enjoyment of his new judicial duties as well as continued good health and success.

Mr. DORN of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to serve in the New York State Assembly with IRWIN D. DAVIDSON and to have appeared before him when he was a judge in the courts of our State. I was delighted 2 years ago when our friendship was renewed upon his election to this body, and his assignment to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, on which I also have the honor to serve.

Representative DAVIDSON's fine capabilities were recognized both in the New York State Assembly and by the attorneys who have appeared before him when he served on the bench. They have also been recognized by his colleagues here in Congress, and most especially by the members of our committee.

I regret the decision that has been made to return to the judiciary of the State of New York. Though it is a distinct loss to the country as a whole it is a very real gain to the legal profession in the State of New York. I look forward to appearing before him again in his judicial capacity, and renewing his friendship whenever we meet in our hometown of New York City.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, there is always a note of sadness at the conclusion of any Congress when we must say goodby to colleagues who have been good and close friends and who will not be returning to these halls again. We from New York will greatly miss our distinguished colleague, IRWIN D. DAVIDSON, who leaves us to return again to the courts of New York State. Prior to coming to Congress, Judge DAVIDSON served in the New York State Legislature and as a justice in the court of special sessions in New York City. Now he has been called to higher judicial office as a judge of the court of general sessions in New York City. We shall miss his kindliness, his brilliant wit, and his friendship, but we wish him well as he continues his career of public service and know that he will bring to one of the highest courts in our State his deep and profound knowledge of the law and the sincere dedication to his work which he has always demonstrated in whatever high office he has been called upon to fill. Our loss is a great gain for the judiciary.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to pay tribute to the distinguished public service of our fellow Congressman, the Honorable IRWIN D. DAVIDSON, Representative of the 20th Congressional District of New York. Congressman DAVIDSON is not running for reelection for Congress. He has been nominated by both the Democratic and Liberal Parties of his State for the office of judge of the court of general sessions in New York County. This is tantamount to his election. The city of New York is to be congratulated on its new judicial ornament. The court's gain is a loss to Congress. And a gain to his lovely wife, Bernice, and his two fine sons.

It has been particularly gratifying to note and be inspired by the career of Congressman DAVIDSON. He is a native-born New Yorker who received his education in the city's schools and at the great New York University where he won the highest scholarship award. He went through law school on a scholarship and later engaged in active practice. In these respects he was another example of an aspiring and able young man who followed in the traditional pattern of growth and achievement on the ladder of success.

However, Congressman DAVIDSON was not satisfied with the routine of a successful practice. He yearned for public service. He felt deeply moved by all that the city, State, and Nation meant to him and he was resolved to devote his life to public affairs. From that time of decision his record is a most impressive one.

In 1935 he was appointed counsel to the legislative bill drafting commission in the New York State Legislature. Shortly after that he acted as special counsel to the New York State Mortgage Commission. In 1936 he was elected to the State legislature where he served for 12 years, and for a time was acting Democratic leader of the house.

The record of legislation sponsored by our colleague is outstanding. In 1937 he introduced the first constitutional amendment providing for slum clearance. In 1939 he spearheaded a constitutional amendment providing for five-sixths jury verdicts in civil cases. Juries up to that time had to be unanimous in their verdicts. He introduced measures for liberalization of the workmen's compensation law, for rent control and for the now famous fair lease law which prevented small type catch-phrases in leases which the average tenant never read.

In all, approximately 100 liberal, progressive, and constructive pieces of legislation were introduced and passed during this tenure as an Assemblyman.

In 1938, he attended the New York State Constitutional Convention where he acted as secretary to the Democratic leader, United States Senator Robert F. Wagner, and during this year conducted a radio program explaining to the public, week by week, the procedures and deliberations of the constitutional convention.

Irwin resigned from the State legislature in 1948 to become a justice in the court of special sessions of New York City where he performed his judicial duties for the next 6½ years.

Judge DAVIDSON resigned from the court to run for Congress. He was elected to the 84th Congress on November 2, 1954 and is a member of the House Committees on the Judiciary and Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

During his first year in Congress, DAVIDSON was quite active in important pieces of legislation, most noted of which was a bill signed by the President to grant a gold congressional medal to Dr. Jonas E. Salk, the scientist who discovered the antipolio vaccine.

He is well known for his many communal activities which include acting as trustee for Rodeph Sholom Temple, the Jewish Consumptive Relief Society, Holy Name Centre, the New York Philanthropic League for Crippled Children and the Grand Street Boys' Foundation. He was chairman of the speakers' bureau for United Jewish Appeal and is permanent chairman of Manhattan for the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. He is a member of the New York City Bar Association, New York County Lawyers Association, Tau Delta Phi fraternity, the Army-Navy Union and of the board of visitors for the Washington Square College of Arts and Sciences.

I am grateful for this opportunity to salute a man who has given much to his countrymen and who is well on the way to years of still greater service.

We will miss him sorely—his great fund of stories, his wonderful sense of humor and his all-around good fellowship.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, this House of Representatives is going to lose the services of a most capable hard-working Member when the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIDSON] leaves this body to become a judge of the court of general sessions of the county of New York. IRWIN DAVIDSON came to us from the bench of the court of special sessions of New York City after a brilliant 6 years of judicial service. Previously, he had been a member of Assembly of the State of New York for 12 years. While in Albany he justly earned a reputation for great legislative ability, serving as acting Democratic leader of that body.

Not only does our friend IRWIN DAVIDSON possess great legislative and judicial ability, he is above all a sterling gentleman of high and affable character, possessing a keen sense of humor along with kindness, uniform courtesy, and a humane heart.

While IRWIN DAVIDSON has been with us for but one Congress, he will long be remembered by the many friends he has made here. His record and his service on the Committee on the Judiciary, the Banking and Currency Committee, and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will long be remembered.

It has been my great personal privilege to have made a good and close friend during these past 2 years. Irwin has been a delightful companion and will certainly be missed at the future meetings of the New York delegation in Congress. I am confident I bespeak the thoughts of all of us in wishing him Godspeed, good health, and success upon his return to the bench. We know that he will grace the court of general sessions of the county of New York with dignity, great ability, courtesy, and humaneness.

HON. HAROLD H. VELDE AND HON. RICHARD W. HOFFMAN

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the entire membership of the House joins the Illinois delegation in expressing regrets at the retirement of HAROLD VELDE and RICHARD HOFFMAN, both of Illinois. These two gentlemen are outstanding Americans and they were great legislators.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the distinguished member of the Illinois delegation, the Honorable HAROLD H. VELDE.

Congressman VELDE not only served his constituents well, but the Nation as a whole, and his activities and investigations as chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee in the 83d Congress will be forever remembered.

Mr. VELDE also made an outstanding contribution to good Government through his activities on the Education and Labor Committee, and having sat next to him in committee in the 83d and 84th Congresses, I will certainly miss him very, very much.

I, like all others, wish for Harold great success as he returns to the practice of law and the many other endeavors that will be open to a man of his exceptional ability.

His voluntary retirement from the United States Congress is a great loss to the Congress and to the Nation, and our best wishes go with him and his family.

HON. JOHN PHILLIPS

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, as a California Democrat, I would like to join in paying tribute to JOHN PHILLIPS, who is a man of the highest integrity, a man of scholarship. He has the demeanor of the scholarly individual he is. He rendered a valuable service in the State legislature before coming here. He developed a reputation for being a man interested in economical government, and when I first came here I was greatly pleased by the vast expressions of respect and admiration for Mr. PHILLIPS.

ACTING SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] to please take the chair.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SAM RAYBURN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader of the House [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, we are ending a most difficult and trying session of Congress. We have had many difficult battles. We have had our differences of opinion, but we always respect each other because we know, whatever were conflicting views, we knew each one was conscientious and worked for what we believed was the good of the country. We leave tonight proud of our friendship and proud of our membership in this national assembly. In these months ahead we will also have a great national debate, a debate that will largely determine what is to be the future of our country. This contest will be bitterly fought, but we hope it will be in harmony with our past traditions. All during this great session of the Congress there was one man who had the universal respect and esteem of all, and that was the man who presided over this House, our great Speaker, SAM RAYBURN. SAM RAYBURN is one of the greatest parliamentarians that this House has ever produced, and I am happy to say, there is one trait that stood above all else, he was eminently fair, fair to both Republicans and Democrats. We hail him for upholding the finest traditions of the great office.

In appreciation of that service, Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask the Members to adopt.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 658

Resolved, That the thanks of the House are presented to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he has presided over the deliberations and performed the arduous duties of the Chair during the present term of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ARENDS). This resolution was unanimously agreed to; and let me say it is one of the best resolutions this Congress ever passed.

The SPEAKER. My colleagues of the House of Representatives, I have been here at the closing of many sessions of the Congress. This is the twenty-second. I never enjoyed the service more than I have with you ladies and you gentlemen. You have been kind and fine to me, and from the bottom of my heart I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], my predecessor, and twice my successor, for his kind remarks about me.

It is a great thing to be a Representative in the Congress of the United States even for one term, because you must have the faith and the confidence of a great many people to get here once, to be elected. And to be reelected is a greater and higher honor.

The House of Representatives, in my opinion, is the bulwark of the American people, their liberties and their common good, because the Representatives come fresh from the people every 2 years.

There was a time when many people thought that the Members of the House of Representatives should be elected for 4 years. At one time, when I was having a little trouble down in the Fourth Congressional District of Texas, I wished that were the case. But long since I have come to the conclusion that it is better for the American people to give the people an opportunity to elect someone nearest to them every 2 years. I hope it is never changed.

You have done me great honor on many occasions. When I wind up this term as Speaker—of course, I do not mean to wind up on the 3d of next January—I will have served as Speaker of the House of Representatives 4 years longer than any other man in the history of the American Government. [Applause.] To be honored once by your colleagues with this distinguished office is something that you can carry with you all of your life as a grand tribute to yourself and you will always be thankful to the Representatives of the American people for having called you to this high station.

So, to each and every one of you on both sides of the aisle, for your kindness, for your consideration in a most difficult situation even under the best circumstances, from a grateful heart I thank you and trust that God will bless you.

I wish you a happy and successful holiday. [Applause, the Members rising.]

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

A BREACH IN THE FREE WORLD SECURITY IS STILL OPEN AND MUST BE CLOSED

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FEIGHAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, many Members of the House are acquainted with the efforts I have made during this session to put a stop to what I consider to be the illegal use of the American taxpayers' money now being expended for the benefit of so-called White Russian refugees living in Red China, who are flowing freely through the crown colony of Hong Kong into some 30 countries of the free world. In my judgment, many of these so-called White Russians are in fact espionage and propaganda agents of the Russian conspiracy of communism. My belief is supported by the startling fact that in Brazil a top Russian espionage agent, who was posing as a White Russian refugee from Red China in order to gain entrance into Brazil under that false cover, was uncovered by the police authorities of that nation. It is also significant that the Brazilian Government then put a stop to the entry of any more of these so-called White Russians from Red China into their country. That stop order is still in effect and I understand that the Brazilian authorities are wisely looking into the character, the purpose, and the activities of all so-called White Russians who have been infiltrated into Brazil.

I believe the chronology of what I have done in order to bring to light the true facts concerning the so-called White Russians will be of interest to Members of Congress.

Upon my return from a 6 weeks inspection tour of the Far East, I made a report which I submitted to the full Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives which underscored these startling facts:

First. That a very large number of people claiming to be so-called White Russians have emigrated from Communist-occupied China into some 30 countries of the free world without having any field security investigation whatever made on them.

Second. That the majority of these so-called White Russians had in their possession valid passports issued by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, a fact which in itself attests to their loyalty for the Government of the U. S. S. R. and the conspiracy of communism.

Third. All of these so-called White Russians had in their possession exit permits issued by the Communist Government of Red China, exit permits which the Americans held by the Chinese Communists have been unable to obtain even after many years of pleading and begging for such exit permits and including the intercession by the United States Government to secure such exit permits for United States citizens held prisoner by the Chinese Communists. It is important to note that Mr. Charles Snyder Miner, a former newspaperman and a businessman in China, attempted for 5 years to get an exit permit, without success, and only a few weeks ago was able to get such an exit permit.

Fourth. That governments of the free world were issuing "sight unseen" visas to these so-called White Russians by the process of granting a "blank check" for the issuance of visas by a representative of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration, and the International High Commissioner for Refugees in Hong Kong. This representative would issue such visas, supposedly on behalf of a country of the free world, to these so-called White Russians as they entered the crown colony of Hong Kong. This "blank check" visa system was necessary in order to get these so-called White Russians into Hong Kong because the British authorities very wisely would not permit any of these people to enter the crown colony unless one of the unsuspecting governments of the free world had promised an entry visa to them. The officials of the crown colony of Hong Kong obviously put the security of the crown colony first because they felt these characters were unwelcome in the crown colony and so long as they passed on to some other part of the world, that no security risk was imposed upon them, and therefore no responsibility was theirs.

Fifth. The representative of the United States escapee program in Hong Kong, the program that uses American dollars to make this breach of the free world security possible, releases the American taxpayers' money and makes possible the movement of these so-called refugees out of Red China, without any field security investigation made on them, into some 30-odd unsuspecting countries of the free world. When I questioned the United States escapee program representative in Hong Kong on this matter he was very evasive, attempted to shift the responsibility to the British representative of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration in Hong Kong. The function of the United States escapee program representative is supposedly to pass upon the adequacy and completeness of the field security investigation made upon these people because that is a specific requirement of the law authorizing public funds to pay the ocean transportation of such refugees, but the facts are that this representative of the United States escapee program could not pass upon the adequacy of the security investigation because no such security investigation was possible on these so-called White Russians. It is obvious therefore that both the letter of the law and the spirit of the law are violated through the use of any of the American taxpayers' money on these so-called White Russian refugees.

All these pertinent facts were made known by me in a report to the full Committee on the Judiciary on December 21, 1955. Since submission of that report I have sought a full-scale public hearing on the issues raised in my report in order that all the facts pertaining thereto might be put before the judgment of the American people.

The full text of the report made by me to the Committee on the Judiciary has not been made public by the process of an official committee print. For this reason, I am, at this point, inserting in the RECORD a copy of that report in order that it may be made known to all Members of Congress and so that its validity may be judged by future events.

REPORT OF INSPECTION OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE REFUGEE RELIEF ACT OF 1953, AS AMENDED, AND RELATED PROBLEMS IN THE COUNTRIES OF SOUTHEAST ASIA AND NORTH ASIA

(By MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN, Member of Congress, 20th Ohio District)

BASIC FINDINGS

1. That the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, includes beneficial provisions which are capable of materially advancing United States foreign policy objectives in the Far East.

2. That certain provisions of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, hinder its successful administration in many key areas of the Far East.

3. That the prospects of accomplishing the purposes of the act in the Far East within the terminal date prescribed by law are good and these prospects would be improved by two amendments to the act.

4. That the tremendous population upsets in the Far East caused by acts of Communist aggression have caused widespread human suffering and displacement.

5. That the concerned free governments of the Far East were quick to respond to the human needs of these victims of Communist aggression and their accomplishments in this respect merit the highest commendation.

6. That United States participation in and contribution to a wide range of projects to assist victims of Communist aggression has proven to be one of the soundest investments made by the American people.

7. That the American voluntary agencies working in the Far East are carrying out a wide range of self-help projects for the victims of communism and are providing real leadership in resolving those human problems which accompany war and aggression.

8. That a serious violation of the security of the free world has been permitted to fester in the Far East due in large measure to negligence on the part of some United States Government officials.

CONCLUSIONS

1. That no security investigation whatsoever is made on the so-called White Russian refugees residing in Red China who are emigrating to some 30 countries and territories of the free world.

2. That governments of the free world admitting such individuals from Red China into their countries appear to be laboring under the false impression that such individuals are subjected to a security investigation and that United States Government security clearance is provided in such cases.

3. That gross negligence in protecting the security of the free world is apparent in the failure to require any security investigation of such individuals residing in Red China who are emigrating to countries of the free world.

4. That United States Government officials concerned with this program cannot escape responsibility for this serious breach of free world security because United States public funds are used to make this security violation possible, through the United States escapee program and indirectly through the United States contribution to the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration.

5. That the American voluntary agencies operating programs of assistance to victims of communism in the Far East are making a substantial contribution to the spiritual and material strength of the free world and to the cause of a just and lasting peace.

6. That the projects of the American voluntary agencies for victims of communism in the Far East are deserving of continued and expanded support by the United States Government and the American public in general.

7. That while the extension of the benefits of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, to refugees in the Far East was unduly delayed there are now good prospects that in 1956 its application will substantially advance United States foreign policy objectives in that area.

8. That Congress should provide a remedy for those provisions of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, which have proven to be senseless obstacles to the successful administration of the act.

9. That the United States International Cooperation Administration is deserving of commendation for sponsoring and advancing self-help projects for refugees in the Far East such as low-cost housing and for the child-feeding program in Hong Kong.

10. That there is an abundance of opportunity in the Far East for the productive use of United States surplus agricultural commodities which would in no way disturb normal commercial markets.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I. That the United States Government take immediate steps to:

(a) Warn all free governments that it takes no responsibility whatsoever for the security clearance of individuals residing in Red China and who are flowing through Hong Kong to many countries of the free world.

(b) Prevent the further use of United States public funds for payment in whole or in part of transportation of such individuals from Hong Kong to countries of the free world.

II. That the House Committee on the Judiciary launch a full-scale investigation of the serious breach in free world security created by the flow of individuals from Red China into the free world in order to fix responsibility upon those who have allowed this gross negligence to go unnoticed until this late date.

III. That the balance of the fund of $500,000 earmarked by the United States escapee program for the transportation of individuals from Red China to countries of the free world be made available to the American voluntary agencies conducting programs to assist the Chinese, Korean, and Vietnamese victims of Red tyranny.

IV. That the International Cooperation Administration continue to advance its program of self-help projects among refugees from communism, particularly those for the construction of low-cost housing, placement of individuals with leadership qualities, local integration and child feeding.

V. That the United States Government explore the possibility of using surplus agricultural commodities for launching additional projects in the Far East similar to the child-feeding program in Hong Kong.

VI. That Congress give early and favorable consideration to amendments to the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, that would—

(a) Eliminate the requirement that governments agree to issue a certificate of readmission for persons issued visas under the act;

(b) Waive the requirement of assurances in instances where an accredited American voluntary agency signifies its interest in a case or where the consular officer is reasonably satisfied that the applicant is not likely to become a public charge.

INTRODUCTION

By appointment of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives a study was made of the Far East, including all the nations of Southeast Asia and North Asia, from the point of view of the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1950 as amended, the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 as amended, and other problems having a possible future bearing upon United States immigration policy. This overall study of Far Eastern immigration and population problems was the first carried out by a member of the House Judiciary Committee since the termination of World War II.

The inspection period involved covered a period from October 2 to November 18, 1955. The countries visited for the purposes of this inquiry were as follows: The Philippines, the British crown colony of Hong Kong, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, Burma, Indonesia, Singapore, and the Malay Federation, Portuguese colony of Macao, Republic of China (Formosa), Korea, and Japan. For purposes of brevity and ready reference this report is divided into three major sections.

Section I. Population displacements caused by intrigue of the Russian Communists and armed aggression carried out by their proconsuls in Asia

Experience in the past has clearly demonstrated that population displacements caused by war or other catastrophes have a direct bearing upon our immigration policy and its implementation. Immediately in the wake of World War II the problem of population upsets in Europe, those caused by the Nazis and the Russian Communist tyrannies and the expulsion from their homelands of some 12 million Germans of ethnic origin brought about a situation in which Congress established emergency immigration programs to help relieve the social and economic and political pressures caused by these upsets. The effects of World War II in Asia resulted in tremendous population upsets particularly on the mainland of China; however, more serious and potentially dangerous population upsets in the Far East have occurred since the end of general hostilities. Those displacements are the direct result of either Russian intrigue, including internal subversion, or armed aggression carried out under the leadership of Russian Communist proconsuls in key nations of Asia.

A. The British Crown Colony of Hong Kong

It is estimated that over 800,000 Chinese refugees have received asylum in Hong Kong since the Communist takeover and occupation of their homeland in 1948. This tremendous influx of refugees fleeing their Communist occupied homeland created a great number of economic and social problems for the colony of Hong Kong. Principal problems have been housing, employment, and schools along with those growing out of broken families. Considering the enormity of the refugee problem which confronted the Hong Kong government, a most remarkable job has been done. A resettlement commission was established by the government and with limited resources it has reduced human suffering and want to a minimum.

Perhaps the outstanding accomplishment in Hong Kong is the construction of housing for the refugees. In this connection the American voluntary agencies with the assistance of the United States Government International Cooperation Administration and the full cooperation of the Hong Kong government have given the leadership to self-help housing projects which will stand as a monument to American concern for homeless victims of aggression. The Catholic Relief Services (NCWC), Lutheran World Federation, Church World Services, are especially to be commended both for their accomplishments to date as well as their determination to complete the job.

The tremendous economic pressure caused by the heavy influx of refugees has created many problems which require continued United States interest and assistance. Perhaps outstanding among these problems is the fact that well over 25,000 refugee children in Hong Kong are entirely dependent upon a feeding program carried out under the auspices of the American voluntary agencies and the welfare department of the Hong Kong government. These children come from either the families of the unemployed or families whose income is so small as to provide insufficient food for the requirements of all the family members. This children-feeding program in Hong Kong provides an excellent example of what intelligent leadership in the utilization of our surplus agricultural commodities can do, both in alleviating suffering and striking a blow for the cause of human freedom. This is particularly evident in parts of the world where the cause of human freedom is now being put to an acid test.

A number of essential welfare services are provided the refugees by American and international voluntary agencies. These services include assistance in small business establishments, medical and dental services, resettlement services, local integration of farmers, and vocational training. These voluntary agencies have contractual arrangements with the International Cooperation Administration, through which public funds are made available to them in order to carry out these services. The agencies offering one or several of the above-noted services are (1) Aid Refugee Chinese Intellectuals, Inc., (2) National Catholic Welfare Conference of America, (3) Church World Services (American Protestant organizations), (4) Lutheran World Federation, (5) Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America (Maryknoll Fathers), (6) World Council of Churches, (7) the Free China Relief Association.

B. The Republic of Vietnam

Communist armed aggression directed from Moscow, assisted by Red China and led by a longtime Russian Comintern agent, Ho Chi Minh, has placed roughly one-half of Vietnam under Communist occupation. A conference at Geneva, Switzerland, brought an end to active hostilities in Vietnam, but also had the effect of splitting the country in half, with one part free and the other part under Communist occupation. As a consequence of Communist occupation of part of this country, well over 700,000 refugees have moved south into the territory of free Vietnam. It is estimated that many hundred thousands more would leave the Communist-occupied territory if they were free to do so.

The arrival of over 700,000 refugees in free Vietnam created a wide range of economic, social, and health problems. It was necessary for the Government to start from scratch in meeting these many problems. With assistance from both the United States Government and the enterprise of voluntary agencies, the Government has accomplished an almost insurmountable task in providing housing, schools, churches, public health facilities, and some type of employment for all those who chose freedom as their way of life. There are refugee villages spread throughout free Vietnam in areas which were once nothing but open farmlands. These villages have their schools, medical clinics, small businesses, and churches. Nearby farmland is tilled by the people. Many of the refugees have found employment outside the villages and in the surrounding areas.

It can now be said that the first task of providing emergency care for these refugees has been accomplished, and to the credit of all those who participated in the work. The major task ahead is to assist these refugees in becoming an integrated part of the Republic of Vietnam, which includes their further dispersion both to the farms and the existing industrial and business life of the country.

It was my privilege to attend the first national conference of refugee leaders which took place in Saigon, Republic of Vietnam, under Government auspices during the time of the inspection visit. These refugee leaders gathered together to work out plans for the future to complete local integration of all victims of Communist aggression. It was a stimulating experience, and one that will long be remembered, to speak with these people who gave up their homes and their material possessions rather than lose their freedom.

The International Cooperation Administration is to be complimented for a job well done in assisting the Government of Vietnam to successfully meet the challenge posed 1 year ago by the arrival of over 700,000 refugees. The National Catholic Welfare Conference is also deserving of commendation for the leadership role it has taken in assisting these refugees with their day-to-day problems and in helping them to plan programs for the future. This assistance has done much to sustain their faith in the cause of human freedom.

C. Cambodia

Cambodia was spared the ravages of Communist military aggression. Nevertheless it has received a number of refugees as a consequence of Red aggression in Vietnam. The exact number of Vietnam refugees in Cambodia is not known but an estimate places the number at upward of 5,000. They are residing in that part of Cambodia which borders on Vietnam. These refugees have created no serious problems for the Cambodian Government, which in turn has assisted them wherever possible to make their livelihood.

D. Laos

Laos has also been spared the ravages of a full-scale Communist aggression. The military action carried out by the Communist guerrilla forces in North Laos has caused some population upsets but nothing of a major character. There are also a considerable number of Vietnam refugees now living in Laos. The Government has demonstrated a competence to resolve problems in connection with refugee victims of communism.

E. Thailand

It is estimated there are as many as 25,000 refugees who escaped the Communist-occupied part of Vietnam. These refugees crossed the Laotian territory where they are now settled in concentrated areas. These refugees are stanch opponents of colonialism and erroneously regard the Communist leader, Ho Chi Minh, as a leader of the nationalist's liberation movement. This problem is complicated by the fact that these refugees regarded the Republic of Vietnam as under the control of Emperor Bao Dai and therefore still under French colonial rule. A real effort is now being made to point out to these Vietnam refugees that President

Diem is the true leader of the nationalist liberation movement and that he is also a stanch opponent of colonialism. It is expected that the recent overwhelming victory registered by President Diem over former Emperor Bao Dai in the October referendum will help these people to understand it is in their interest to take up residence in the Republic of free Vietnam. It should be noted that while these refugees erroneously regard Ho Chi Minh as a national hero, nevertheless, they are unalterably opposed to communism and would not return to the Communist occupied part of Vietnam. Communist agents are active throughout the area where these refugees are settled and their activities cause unrest and dissatisfaction which could cause trouble in the future.

F. Burma

Burma has had some population upsets as a consequence of Communist guerrilla action in its northern provinces. However, these upsets to date have not caused problems beyond the capabilities of the Burmese Government. Some of the Burmese Government officials are population conscious because of the geographical location of their nation to areas affected by great internal population pressures. India to the west with a population in excess of 400 million people has always had a tendency to have many of its people spill over into Burma. Communist occupied China to the north with a population claimed to be in excess of 450 million has long encouraged its people to migrate southward into Burma and the other countries of Southeast Asia. It is understandable that leaders of Burma with its population of some 180 million should be concerned with the possibility of being overrun and absorbed by either one or both of her giant neighbors.

G. Macao

Macao, a Portuguese colony, located on a small peninsula extending out of the mainland of China, has a relatively serious refugee problem. The colony with a population of approximately 300,000 has had to take in a refugee population of some 35,000 people. All of these refugees are Chinese except a few nationals of Portugal who had lived in China.

Within the limits of its resources, including the sparse land which makes up the colony, the government has done what it could to assist these refugees. With assistance of the United States Government a considerable number of refugee housing units have been constructed in Macao. In addition, supplemental food programs have been established utilizing United States agricultural surpluses. An American voluntary agency, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, has taken the responsibility for initiating and overseeing both of these projects.

The future facing the refugees in Macao is a dismal one. There is no employment opportunity for them in Macao and little or no opportunity for them to emigrate elsewhere. They are always faced with the prospect that Red China will suddenly decide to overrun the Portguese colony of Macao which would certainly be the end of everything for them. Despite these handicaps the refugees interviewed made it clear that they did not want charity, but what they wanted was the opportunity to earn their own way in an atmosphere of freedom. The voluntary agency officials in Macao have been studying for some time the possibility of establishing several small business enterprises in the colony to provide employment for the refugees. It is hoped that these authorities will find some feasible plan to provide employment for these good people and that such plans will be given quick United States Government support.

H. Formosa

It is estimated that there are approximately 2 million refugees from Communist occupied China now residing on Formosa. The Government of the Republic of China has done a noteworthy job in integrating these refugees into the social, economic, and political life of free China. Emphasis has been placed on getting these refugees into occupations either identical or similar to those in which they were formerly engaged. There is a great deal of evidence of this activity in Taipei where there are hundreds of small business establishments. The Government has also taken practical steps to provide opportunities for higher education, including the training of teachers, provision for medical and dental schools and colleges, engineering, and government administration.

It is estimated that there are over 2,500 Chinese refugees now residing in Formosa who are graduates of American colleges and universities. This fact, in some measure, accounts for very strong ties between the Republic of China and the American people.

One project established in Formosa supported in part by United States Government funds worthy of special commendation is "Juddville," a welfare center established for the care and training of Chinese refugees. This project was named after a distinguished Member of Congress, the Honorable WALTER JUDD, who spent many years in China as a medical missionary and who is also chairman of Aid Refugee Chinese Intellectuals, Inc., an American voluntary agency. "Juddville" is a model village located about 10 miles from the city of Taipei. It is equipped with a medical center, school, handicraft shop, low-cost but attractive housing, and a small rice and vegetable farm. In addition to providing temporary assistance as well as medical care for a great number of refugees, the workers in this center concentrate on assisting Chinese intellectuals in finding their proper place in and contributing to the progress of Formosa.

The Government of the Republic of China is competent to take care of any future refugee problems which it might face as a consequence of Communist oppression in the homeland.

I. Korea

The Republic of Korea has been subjected to one of the biggest internal population upsets since the end of World War II. These population upsets have been caused by the tyranny of the Communist occupation north of the 38th parallel, the Moscow-directed and Red Chinese-supported war of aggression against the Korean people and the ravages of that aggressive war. As a consequence of these acts of violence it is estimated that at one time or another over one-half of the Korean people were displaced, dispossessed or forced to flee their native villages and homes. During the most active stages of the Korean war millions of refugees fled from the north to the south in the hope that they could escape from the tyranny of communism and at the same time place themselves under the protection of the United Nations forces which were then seeking to turn back Red aggression in Korea. Consequently, when the shaky and highly dubious armed truce was reached in 1953, there were millions of refugees in free Korea. These refugees needed immediate housing, medical care, clothing and food. Considering the magnitude of the problem the Republic of Korea faced at that time it can be reported that a remarkable job has been done in bringing order out of chaos and providing all these refugees with the essentials of life. While the refugee problem is by no means completely resolved it is certainly reduced to manageable proportions and gives every promise of being resolved completely in the immediate years ahead.

The investment the United States has made toward alleviating the problem of refugees in Korea has been a good one. The returns in human values and political stability far outweigh the cost in dollars and cents. The American voluntary agencies whose services have been one of the bright beacons of hope for the people since the end of World War II have done and are continuing to do a great work. Without the leadership and inspiration which these agencies have provided the tremendous job of salvaging the human resources of Korea could not have been done. Principal among these American voluntary agencies are Church World Services, National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the American Korean Relief Foundation.

Section II. The administration of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (Public Law 203, 83d Cong.)

The following provisions of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, have specific and special application in each of the nations visited during the inspection trip.

Section 4 (a) (11): "Not to exceed 2,000 visas to refugees residing within the district of an American consular office in the Far East: Provided, That such visas shall be issued only in said consular office district and only to refugees who are not indigenous to the area described in this paragraph."

Section 4 (a) (12): "Not to exceed 3,000 visas to refugees, residing within the district of an American consular office in the Far East: Provided, That such visas shall be issued only in said consular office district and only to refugees who are indigenous to the area described in this paragraph."

Section 4 (a) (13): "Not to exceed 2,000 visas to refugees of Chinese ethnic origin whose passports for travel to the United States are endorsed by the Chinese National Government or its authorized representatives."

In addition, section 5 A has special application to Korea. Section 5 A reads as follows:

"Not to exceed 4,000 special nonquota immigrant visas may be issued to eligible orphans as defined in this Act who are under 10 years of age at the time the visa is issued: Provided, That not more than two such special nonquota immigrant visas may be issued to eligible orphans adopted, or to be adopted by any one United States citizen and spouse, unless necessary to prevent the separation of brothers or sisters."

The general opinion was expressed by responsible American officials in the countries visited that the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, was potentially valuable in advancing United States foreign policy objectives in Asia and in creating a better understanding of United States policies by the people of Asia. The application of the benefits of this legislation were unduly delayed in practically every one of the countries visited. A variety of reasons were advanced for that delay. Primary, among those reasons, were that all of these nations were reluctant to commit themselves on the certificate of readmission required under section 7 (d) (2) for each and every person issued a visa. The second major reason advanced for the delay was the requirement of assurances provided for in section 7 (a).

It was the opinion of all those interviewed that the requirement of the certificate of readmission placed an unnecessary obstacle in the way of a successful administration of the act. Generally speaking, governments concerned were resentful of this requirement because it represents an infringement upon their sovereign powers. In addition, many responsible individuals felt that this requirement neutralized the strategic value of the positive provisions of the act, including our recognition by enactment of law that those who were willing to fight for freedom in Asia would be accorded the same recognition by the United States as that accorded those in Europe who take a similar stand.

In general the assurance provisions were also found to be a hindrance in bringing about the best possible application of the act. In many cases the lack of required assurances made it impossible for the field administrators to assist worthy cases whose emigration to the United States would stand as a concrete demonstration of our basic national motivation to try to help all those in need. One bright spot in this respect was found in Japan where the number of assurances put forward by Californians and other west-coast farmers exceed the number of internally displaced Japanese desiring emigration to the United States. It is difficult accurately to estimate the possibilities of a successful implementation of the provisions of the Refugee Relief Act, in the countries of Asia. If, however, the requirements of the certificate of readmission were revised and a practical interpretation of the assurance requirement were applied there are good reasons to believe that the program will be successful before December 31, 1956, the date when the act expires.

A. Philippines

The actual application of the provisions of Public Law 203 were delayed until April 1955. The reason for this delay was that the Philippine Government was unwilling to agree to the certificate of readmission as required by section 7 (d) (2). In April of this year a workable agreement in this respect was arrived at with the Government of the Philippines. Since that date there have been applications made under Public Law 203 to cover in excess of 1,600 persons. With but few exceptions these applicants are Chinese. The few exceptions are represented by so-called White Russians, former residents of China who were provided temporary haven in the Philippines before Communist occupation of the mainland of China. There are few among these exceptions who have not already been rejected by United States immigration authorities for reasons involving very questionable backgrounds or for excludable reasons of health.

In order equitably to apply the benefits of Public Law 203 to these applicants in the Philippines an answer must be found to an acute shortage of certified assurances as required by section 7 (a) of the act.

B. Hong Kong

The administration of the Refugee Relief Act assigned a special consular officer to Hong Kong in July 1954 to complete negotiations leading to the implementation of the provisions of the act. Final arrangements with respect to the certificate of readmission as required by section 7 (d) (2) were completed in December 1954. The following statistics, with respect to the application of the provisions of the law, will be of interest:

(a) Up to October 1, 1955:

Applications: 11,400 individuals.

Certified assurances: 3,731 individuals.

Investigations completed: 990 individuals.

Visas issued: 680 individuals.

(b) Applications under section 4 (a) (11) (persons who are not indigenous to the area):

Applications: 380 individuals.

Certified assurances: 170 individuals.

Investigations completed: 50 individuals.

Visas issued: 38 individuals.

With reference to the above it is noted that the vast majority of the applicants and individuals who obtained visas are so-called "White Russians." Included are some few Poles and Portuguese nationals. Upon inquiry it was revealed that practically all of these applicants determined to be nonindigenous to the area spoke Russian and English and few of them spoke Chinese although they have alleged to have lived in China over a period of many years.

Section 4 (a) (13): Up to October 1, 1955, a total of 38 visas had been issued in Hong Kong under the provisions of this section of the act. Inquiry was made as to why there had not been more applicants under this provision. It was learned that a precedent had been established by the consular officer requiring that the applicant be in actual possession of a passport endorsed by the Government of the Republic of China as prerequisite of such application. Consequently, this precedent has tended to slow down applications under this section. A more detailed examination of this problem is presented under the section pertaining to the Republic of China (Formosa).

With respect to security, a number of conferences were held with the officers directly responsible for this phase of work. It was their opinion that the present staff of field investigators assigned to Hong Kong was able to handle the volume of work involved. In addition it was reported that excellent cooperation and assistance in this respect had been provided by the government authorities in Hong Kong. However, concern was expressed over the security problem created by so-called White Russian refugees in China who were seeking admission into the United States under section 4 (a) (11). The Hong Kong government will not allow them to enter its territory unless they have in their possession a valid visa for some country of the free world. It is impossible for any United States agency to conduct a field investigation, as required by law, on any of these applicants because they are still residing in Communist China. Even the usual "name check" which is but a part of any security investigation is futile because the source records are completely out-dated and therefore unreliable. In these circumstances, the security officers connected with the administration of the Refugee Relief Act in Hong Kong have refused to give a security clearance to such cases. These officers were assured that their judgment in this respect was most correct and that Congress would be heartened to learn of the stand they have taken in this matter.

A complete investigation was made of the security problem presented by so-called White Russian refugees now residing in Communist China, the results of which are set forth in section III of this report.

C. Other Countries in Southeast Asia

The administrator of the refugee relief program has established a regional office in Singapore to service applications coming from the following countries and areas of Southeast Asia: Borneo, Burma, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaya, Netherlands New Guinea, New Caledonia, North Borneo, Portuguese Timor, Sarawak, Singapore, Thailand, Timor, Vietnam.

In discussing the administration program with the regional officer, it was learned that agreements with respect to the certificate of readmission had been reached with the following: Singapore, Sarawak, British North Borneo, Federation of Malaya, Thailand, Vietnam.

It is obvious therefore that the requirements of section 7 (d) (2) are a hindrance to the program in a great many countries in Southeast Asia.

The following statistics concerning the number of applications and their source are of interest (place of application and number):

Singapore Consular District (includes Federation of Malaya, and three territories of British North Borneo), 100.

Indonesia (with verified assurances), 11.

Thailand, 8.

Vietnam (with verified assurances), 5.

Place of issue and number:

Singapore consular district, 34.

Saigon, 2.

It was learned that the requirement of assurances had seriously reduced the number of applications accepted in each of the field offices noted above. A practice has been established of accepting applications only from those who have in their possession certified assurances. This accounts for what appears to be a relatively small workload for the regional office at Singapore. There are a considerable number of persons who would become applicants under the law if they could arrange for sponsorship in the United States or if the requirements on assurances were modified. This is particularly true in Vietnam.

D. Formosa

A number of extended conferences were held with the Chairman of the Ministry for Overseas Chinese and members of his staff with respect to the application of section 4 (a) (13) as well as the problems of Chinese refugees in general. These officials were most interested and cooperative and expressed a keen interest in bringing about the best possible results from the refugee relief program.

With respect to section 4 (a) (13), which requires applicants applying under it to have in their possession a passport endorsed by the Republic of China, a number of practical problems were encountered. To begin with, the Government had, up to October 1955, been reluctant to endorse passports unless the applicant was able to give proof of assurances from a sponsor in the United States. This position was taken so as not to encumber the offices of the Refugee Relief Program in the Far East with a large number of applicants who would not be able to qualify because they lacked sponsors in the United States. The Government, however, has recently taken the position of granting endorsed passports to applicants who do not have a sponsor in the United States but who appear to be otherwise eligible under the act. This action has been taken in the hope that an adequate number of sponsors will be found in the United States for these worthy people.

Up to November 7, 1955, the Ministry for Overseas Chinese had received a total of 622 applications for endorsed passports. As of the same date the Ministry had approved 440 of those applications. It was noted that approximately 300 applications for endorsed passports have been made by residents of Hong Kong.

This phase of the program would be facilitated if interested applicants in Hong Kong would make early application to the Republic of China for an endorsed passport. This procedure will be particularly urgent during 1956 when it is expected that visas authorized under section 4 (a) (12) will be exhausted somewhat before the terminal date of the act itself.

The Government of the Republic of China has extended its full cooperation to United States officials administering the Refugee Relief Act. It has established a Government committee made up of representatives of the Ministries for Overseas Chinese, Foreign Affairs, Interior and Security to work with representatives of the United States Government.

Up to November 11, 1955, a total of 170 people had emigrated from Formosa to the United States under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended.

E. Korea

Up to November 14, 1955, a total of 296 applications for visas under the Refugee Relief Act have been made. This does not take into account applicants under or interest shown in the orphan provisions of the law. As of this same date 114 visas had been issued and there were 182 cases under active investigation.

The Government of the Republic of Korea readily agreed to issue certificates of readmission to all Koreans who might qualify under the Refugee Relief Act. However, they have not agreed to issue such certificates to non-Koreans. It was learned that few non-Koreans applying under the act were Russians from Red China and few Chinese refugees.

The major problem in the administration of the refugee program in Korea is a dearth of sponsors to provide assurances for the many worthy applicants. Special efforts have been made to secure such assurances with but little success. One of the reasons for this is that relatively few persons of Korean origin live in the United States and they have not been able to stimulate others to sponsor the applicants. Unless assurances are provided or revision is made on the requirement of assurances most of these applicants in Korea will not receive a visa to the United States.

A number of problems have been encountered in administering the orphan provisions of the act. While the orphan problem is pretty much restricted to what are called "GI babies" there is an enormous amount of redtape required in order to process a case. For example, merely to initiate a case requires an exchange of three letters between Korea and the United States. It was learned that a considerable number of orphans would be adopted by United States military personnel stationed in Korea and Japan except that the visas issued would expire before the tour of duty would end which in turn would mean they would not be able to get the child into the United States before the expiration of the act. This prospect was further complicated by the fact that no visas can be revalidated after December 31, 1956, the date when the act expires.

The administrator of the Refugee Relief Act in Korea was satisfied with arrangements made for security investigations of all applicants under the act. The appropriate officials of the Republic of Korea have extended their full cooperation in this matter. In particular, the commanding officer of the counterintelligence corps of the army of the Republic of Korea was commended for his valuable contribution to the successful operation of the program.

F. Japan

The administration of the refugee relief program in Japan did not get underway until 1955. Up to May 1955, a total of 100 applications had been received and 4 cases were completed and visas issued. There was a large spurt of activity between May 1955, and October 31, 1955. As of that date a total of 795 applications had been received, 293 investigations had been completed, and 100 visas had been issued.

The Government of Japan has agreed to the certificate of readmission with respect to Japanese nationals. However, no agreement has as yet been reached on this requirement with respect to non-Japanese who have made application in Japan. This, however, must be considered as a very minor problem since only six non-Japanese individuals have applied.

The administrator of the program was optimistic concerning results that he expected to attain under section 4 (a) (12) of the act. For example, he has received slightly over 500 assurances from sponsors in California and other States on the west coast to cover Japanese farmer applicants. It was his estimate that as many as 1,000 Japanese might qualify for visas to the United States under this section. They were broken down into the following three main categories:

A. Typhoon victims.

B. Repatriates from Manchuria.

C. Victims of military operations (including residents of Nagasaki and Hiroshima who may have been victims of World War II operations).

The administrator of the program was satisfied with arrangements made for security investigations and clearance of individuals applying under the act. In this connection, the appropriate officials of the Government of Japan have been most cooperative and helpful.

Section III. The security problem created by so-called "White Russian" immigrants flowing into the free world from Red China through the crown colony of Hong Kong

During the course of the inspection carried out in the countries of southeast Asia and north Asia, a very serious security problem was uncovered. Gross negligence on the part of United States Government officials in laying countries of the free world open to wholesale infiltration by Russian Communist agents impels the writing of this special section. A full exposé is made of this negligence with the hope that immediate corrective action will be taken by the proper authorities in the United States Government and that Congress immediately after it reconvenes, will undertake a complete and thorough investigation in order to fix responsibility on those individuals responsible for this wholesale breach of security of the free world.

According to official estimates, a total of some 5,900 individuals, the vast majority of whom are so-called White Russians who are alleged to have lived in Red China for many years, have moved into the free world through the crown colony of Hong Kong since 1952. These people have emigrated to practically every country and territory of the free world as well as to Communist-occupied countries, including Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. Their movement has been arranged for and initiated by either the Intergovernmental Committee on European Migration or the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or by joint action on the part of both these international agencies.

Inquiry was made on each and every step undertaken in the movement of these people from Red China into the free world by either United States Government officials, representatives of American voluntary agencies, or representatives of intergovernmental agencies. The steps taken in their chronological order are as follows:

1. The individual living in Red China initiates his application for a visa to one of the countries of the free world by writing a letter of application to (a) the Shanghai office shared jointly by the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or (b) to any voluntary agency located in Hong Kong, or (c) to the Resident Representative in Hong Kong of the Joint Office of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (hereafter referred to as Resident Representative ICEM/UNHCR).

Pointed inquiry was made concerning the Shanghai office shared by the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This seemed a strange arrangement since Red China has not been admitted to the United Nations, that an organ of the United Nations would be operating within its borders. Moreover the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration which was created by the initiative of Congress was launched under the specific understanding that Communist or Communist-dominated nations would not be admitted to membership and that dealings with such governments would be excluded. It was not possible to get more specific information on this Shanghai office because no one really knew how it existed or how it was actually run.

2. All applications, regardless of initial source, are channeled to the voluntary agencies for their handling. This procedure is followed because the voluntary agencies have been responsible for securing the visas—a factor which will be explained in more detail in the following paragraph. The voluntary agencies then send back to the applicant a 4-page questionnaire which they request the applicant to fill out and return to them.

3. When the voluntary agencies receive these filled-out forms from the applicants in Red China, they then forward such applications to one of their representatives in the countries of the free world. These representatives in turn, use the data contained in this 4-page questionnaire, the validity and accuracy of which has in no way been security checked by any responsible government or intergovernmental official, to negotiate with a particular government of the free world in order to secure a visa to that country for the applicant and such dependents as he might have.

4. If the voluntary agency representative is successful in negotiating a visa from one of the countries of the free world, a "visa authority" is then forwarded to the Resident Representative of ICEM/UNHCR in Hong Kong. This visa authority is an official notice that a particular government of the free world has agreed to grant a visa to the person whose application was submitted to them by a voluntary agency.

5. The Resident Representative of ICEM/UNHCR in Hong Kong then notifies the Shanghai office of ICEM/UNHCR to put them under notice that the applicant has a valid visa to one of the countries of the free world.

6. Thereafter the Shanghai office sends notice to the resident representative in Hong Kong covering the following three basic points:

(a) That the applicant is medically sound;

(b) That the applicant is likely to get his exit permit from the Red Chinese authorities;

(c) That if stateless, the applicant will be supplied with identity documents.

7. The Resident Representative of ICEM/UNHCR in Hong Kong then applies to the government of Hong Kong for a transit visa for the applicant. At this point, assurance must be given the government of Hong Kong that the applicant for a transit visa has a valid visa for another country of the free world and that arrangements have been made to transport such applicant to that country. After a transit visa is granted, notice of same is then telegraphed to the Shanghai office with the request that the applicant then be moved to Hong Kong.

8. When the applicant arrives in Hong Kong, he goes to the office of the Resident Representative of ICEM/UNHCR where a series of interviews and a medical examination takes place. The applicant then receives a visa which is issued by the resident representative, acting for the receiving country.

The only exception to this last step is required by one of the Latin American Republics. Applicants for admission into that country do not actually receive their visas until they arrive in Genoa, Italy, where such visa is issued by a consular officer of that Government.

While the above procedural steps are being taken, a name check of each individual applicant is made. The name check consists of a check against records held by the government of Hong Kong, by the Republic of China (Formosa), and the United States. Specific inquiry was made to each of these sources where it was learned that their records are both incomplete and so out-dated as to be of no real value in a proper security investigation.

At one point during this inquiry, it was inferred by the Hong Kong representative of the United States Escapee Program that the American voluntary agencies assist in the security investigation of the applicants residing in Red China. Since this appeared to be a highly irregular arrangement, inquiry was made as to whether these American voluntary agencies have representatives in Red China and it was learned that without exception none of them had such representatives. It developed that when voluntary agencies receive derogatory information through refugees who themselves either reside in or formerly resided in Red China, this information is passed on to the representatives of the United States Escapee program in Hong Kong who in turn makes this information available to the resident representative of ICEM/UNHCR in Hong Kong. Such unchecked information may in no sense be considered as a reliable security aid. This evaluation is not to be regarded as a reflection on the work of any American voluntary agency, but rather upon any government or intergovernmental official who attempts to use such voluntary agencies in connection with security problems.

The obvious conclusion reached after this careful study was that no field security investigation whatsoever is conducted on persons residing in Red China who are applicants for emigration to countries of the free world. The so-called "visa authority" is a blank check signed by governments to admit immigrants concerning whose background they have no reliable or verified information. There is reason to believe that the governments issuing such blank check visas are laboring under the false impression that a thorough-going security investigation and clearance is done on each of these applicants before they arrive in their country of destination. It is also believed that this false assumption is further advanced by the role United States Government officials play in this movement of people from Red China, particularly the fact that funds provided by United States Escapee Program are used to cover the transportation cost of most of these people from Hong Kong to the country of their destination. For example, a grant of $500,000 has been made by the United States Escapee Program to the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration to make possible the movement of such applicants residing in Red China to countries in the free world.

United States Government security officials who were interviewed concerning this obvious breach of free world security were quick to point out that they were in no sense responsible for security clearances of those individuals moved from Red China through Hong Kong into the free world. Moreover, these same officials expressed their concern for the absence of reasonable security provisions in connection with this program. It was made clear during the course of several conferences with these security officers that the name check they were requested to make of United States Government files in no way constituted reliable security check.

During the course of this special inquiry the resident representative of ICEM/UNHCR was most helpful and cooperative. He was candid and open in the discussion of the problem outlined above, recognizing that a field security check of these applicants was impossible and that the element of risk in moving any individuals from Red China to countries of the free world was both great and ever-present. The resident representative in Hong Kong has done nothing more than carry out the orders and instructions of higher authorities.

In connection with this problem, one may ask what right a congressional subcommittee may have to inquire into the immigration policies or practices of another country. It was not the purpose of this inquiry to become involved in the immigration policy or practice of other nations. It was the intent, however, of this committee to determine whether United States public funds were in any way being used to make this movement of individuals from Red China to countries of the free world possible. It was also the intent of this inquiry to determine whether United States officials were in any way involved in passing upon the security fitness of any of these applicants from Red China or whether the likelihood existed that the governments of the free world receiving these immigrants labored under the false impression that a security clearance was provided by the United States Government.

It is of special interest to note that during the period from March 1, 1952 through October 1, 1955, a total of 5,901 residents of Red China received visas under the procedures outlined above and migrated to a country of the free world. During 1952, 759 individuals were so moved; during 1953, 3,266; during 1954, 1,463; during 1955 (up to October 31), 413. By far the greatest number of these individuals went to Brazil, a total of 2,627.

Approximately 85 percent of the individuals involved in this movement from Red China to countries of the free world were so-called "White Russians." In the official record they are classified as either citizens of the U. S. S. R., Russians or stateless. When one takes into account the extreme measures undertaken by the Russian Communists to prevent anyone escaping from territory they occupy into the free world and the constant demand of Moscow upon free governments to hand over to them Russian citizens who have escaped, brings into sharp focus the unusual if not peculiar status apparently enjoyed by the so-called "White Russian" refugees in China. There is little doubt that the Communist regime in Red China is completely responsive to the demands of Moscow and there is good reason to doubt that the Red Chinese would allow the exit of these so-called "White Russians" over the objections of Moscow.

A great deal of publicity has in the past years been given to White Russians, and they have usually been portrayed as enemies of Red Russia. Little or no publicity has been given to the fact that these so-called White Russians living in Harbin, China, flocked to renew their allegiance to Moscow following World War II. Nor has the fact that a very large number of these people still carry valid passports issued by the U. S. S. R. been given the public notice it warrants. The Kremlin never allows an enemy to make use of a U. S. S. R. passport. It is flirting with disaster naively to equate White Russians as enemies of Russian communism or advocates of democracy.

Due consideration was given to the records which indicate a total of several hundred individuals of various other nationalities, such as Polish, Armenian, Ukrainian, Lithuanian, Latvian, Estonian, and German, had been moved from Red China under this program. Recognition was also accorded the movement of a small number of hardship cases—the blind, tubercular, etc.—from Red China to countries of the free world. However desirable may be the continued assistance to such people, the conclusion must be faced that the grave risks involved in any program of this type override all other considerations.

Inquiry was made concerning the ages of these individuals who were moved from Red China to the free world. This point of inquiry has special meaning when it is recalled that the Russian-Communists take special care to prevent the escape of persons in the most productive years of their life. It is fundamental to communism that manpower is the only value that man has to the State. It is interesting to note, therefore, that analysis of an average month of activity on this program reveals that of a total of 351 persons moved, 153 were between the ages of 21 and 50. This same analysis revealed that approximately 66 percent of these individuals were under 50 years of age.

Responsible officials in the United States Government can take immediate steps to plug this grave security breach. This can be done immediately by undertaking these two simple steps:

1. By prohibiting the use of any United States public funds, either directly or indirectly, for the movement of immigrants from Red China through Hong Kong to countries of the free world. This includes the use of direct funds by the United States escapee program, as well as the use of public funds appropriated for the use of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration.

2. To inform all of the governments who to date have been providing blank check visa authority that the United States Government takes no responsibility whatsoever for the security clearances of persons residing in Red China who make application to them, through the intermediary of voluntary agencies, for a visa of permanent residence.

The urgency for immediate action on the part of responsible United States Government officials is underscored by the following:

1. There are over 5,000 active applicants now residing in Red China under consideration in Hong Kong.

2. The resident representative of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration and the United States High Commissioner for Refugees in Hong Kong has a blank check to issue over 100 valid visas for countries of the free world to such applicants.

3. The United States escapee program has authorized the use of $500,000 of United States public funds to cover the cost of transportation of such applicants who emigrate from Red China through Hong Kong to any country or territory of the free world.

THE 84TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANIK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, as we approach the closing hours of the 84th Congress, it is well that we look back upon the work of this Congress and analyze the result of the blending of the legislative effort of the Members of Congress. This Congress put more statutes on the legislative books than any other Congress in the preceding 5 years. A fair appraisal of the record of the 84th Congress will indicate a wide area of cooperation with the present administration, embracing for the most part the President's proposals, but expanding and liberalizing his program in an effective degree. For the greater part, the President had to rely on the liberal coalition of members of both political parties for the realization of his proposals. The 84th Congress did not challenge the President of opposite political faith—it worked toward a united front to an extent rare in American history. Congress probed, Congress investigated, and Congress acted in many new areas.

On the domestic front, one of the bitterest fights in Congress, which was of great importance to the people of the Greater Cleveland area, was the fight against the bill to exempt independent producers of natural gas from Federal regulation. This legislation if enacted into law would have resulted in a tremendous increase in the natural gas rates in the Greater Cleveland area. Cleveland consumers of natural gas were as vitally concerned as perhaps any other group in America. Our city enjoys a very reasonable gas rate which results from the widespread use of gas for space heating and from the great industrial use of gas. This legislation was passed by the House in the spring of 1955, and early in 1956 passed the Senate.

The President's veto prevented this legislation from becoming law. While I was happy about the decision of the President in vetoing this dangerous legislation, my reasons were upon different grounds. His veto was as a result of the so-called Case incident and the political implications that resulted therefrom. My opposition to the legislation was based upon my belief that the natural gas of the Southwest and other parts of America which reaches the Midwest and the Northeastern States by way of interstate pipelines is a public utility within the full purview of the law and therefore subject to public regulation. To do otherwise would place the gas consumers of our community at the mercy of the gas producers who would use their unregulated power to charge the helpless gas-consuming public as much as they would be willing to pay for this important public service.

In the course of the debate on the natural-gas bill, I had my baptismal in the fire of congressional debate. It was an experience that I will never forget.

The 1955 session of the 84th Congress saw the increase in the national minimum wage from 75 cents to $1. It was my privilege to be among that group of legislators who felt that the national minimum wage should be $1.25, and in this effort we had to struggle against the influence of many people in Congress and the Chief Executive who felt that the minimum wage should not be increased or that its increase should be limited to 90 cents. In my judgment, it is doubtful that the administration would have recommended any increase at all if it had not been for the great pressure and sentiment for this legislation in the 84th Congress. The increase in the minimum wage, while limited to interstate businesses and industries, had the effect of increasing wage standards throughout the entire country. For us in the greater Cleveland area it served to raise the level of wages in the low-income Southern States and thereby helped to stay the movement of industry from the Northern States to the Southern States where the labor market was cheaper. It has always been my judgment that regions in America should have the full right to compete for business and industry but that competition should be based on markets, accessibility of facilities, availability of power and water and industrial sites and skilled labor, but never on the basis of cheaper wage standards. On the minimum-wage bill I argued before the congressional committees that the last increase of minimum wage took place in 1949 and that if 75 cents per hour was determined as a proper minimum wage in 1949, certainly $1.25 would be necessary today. I further pointed out that the Nation should follow a fair and reasonable formula for determining a minimum wage based upon an hourly wage which would produce an income sufficient to provide for a normal family under the minimum conditions of decency in which we can permit Americans to live.

In the 1st session of the 84th Congress, I was among those Members of Congress who supported an unsuccessful effort to reduce the income tax. Although this bill took the form of a $20 per person tax credit, I gave it support because I felt there was a tremendous need for increasing the take-home pay of the great majority of working citizens. A bill to increase dependency exemptions would have been founded on stronger principles. The present dependency exemption of $600 bears little relationship to the cost of supporting a dependent. A dependency exemption should be what it purports to be—an effort to allow a taxpayer a fair tax credit for the cost to him of a dependent's support. The purpose of the dependency exemption is to place the taxpayer with dependents in a more equal position with the taxpayer lacking dependents. Today's dependents are tomorrow's workers, creators of goods, services, enterprises, and defenders of the national security.

The family is the keystone of our society of government and social life. The family must have realistic tax allowances for the cost of supporting dependents, for the cost of educating them and providing them with medical care. During the course of the legislative session, I introduced legislation to accomplish these purposes but committee action was not forthcoming.

In the 1st legislative session of the 84th Congress, I supported appropriation funds to construct new railroad bridges over the Cuyahoga River and thereby facilitate the movement of ore and limestone and coal from Lake Erie to the plants in the industrial Cuyahoga River Valley. In addition, I supported legislation for the extension of the Great Lakes Seaway and for the widening and deepening of the connecting channels of the upper Great Lakes to facilitate the shipment of heavy freight cargoes to Cleveland from both the upper lakes and the St. Lawrence River. This legislation is indeed important to preserve for Cleveland its position as a great steel and machine tool producing center. To our community this means jobs and homes and growth.

In the spring of 1955 I was the very first person to raise the issue of the lack of control of the Public Health Administration in the development of the Salk antipolio vaccine. It was shocking to learn that large quantities of this new drug were released without adequate Government supervision. In the course of hearings before my Banking and Currency Committee, I pointed out the derelictions of public responsibility on this important issue, and at the conclusion of long and extensive hearings the Surgeon General of the United States admitted this dereliction.

The highway bill of 1956 was one of the important enactments of the 84th Congress. For the first time the Government of the United States was responding to the need to modernize and improve the 40,000 mile Interstate Highway System. Congestion and the increasing number of automobiles had rendered the existing highway system obsolete and conditions were progressing so badly that the automobile itself was in danger of becoming obsolete. With my background experience as legal adviser to the State department of highways, I vowed with all of my strength to oppose legislation which provided that the Government would pay for the relocation of public and private utilities made necessary for the improvement of the highway system. It seemed to me that the utilities were using highway rights-of-way without charge and certainly deserve to at least contribute to the cost of relocating their own facilities. This law has raised the Federal gasoline tax 1 cent but the effect will be highways which are safer and more equipped to assume modern-day traffic.

In the first session of Congress the House of Representatives passed out legislation to increase social-security benefits by reducing the retirement age for women from age 65 to age 62 and to provide for disability benefits for workers who are totally disabled at age 50. Although this is not a tremendous increase in retirement benefits, it represented as much as could be done in this session of Congress in view of the tremendous opposition to this legislation by the President and his administration.

Although this is a moderate adjustment of our social-security laws, it will have a far-reaching effect upon our entire economy. The lowered retirement age for women will undoubtedly become a tremendous incentive for the retirement of women as well as for men who have continued their employment simply because the woman of the household was not able to enjoy her social-security benefits. The increase in the numbers of our retired and their consequent displacement from employment or from the lists of those seeking employment will create innumerable job opportunities for those below retirement age. As a matter of fact, this may create job opportunities for a large segment of our unemployed working forces of middle age who will be the most eligible candidates for positions in industry which will be vacated by the increasing number of our retiring citizens.

Nothing is more important than to permit our senior citizens to retire in dignity. The retirement income should be sufficient to permit them to live at a level which is in some measure commensurate with the level they enjoyed throughout the employable years. Retirement should not force them to move from a home to a hovel. Nor should it force them to substitute no medical care for the inadequate medical care which they received during their employment years. Our retirement program should permit our retired families to live in comfort, to buy the medical and hospital care which they need and to enjoy the benefits and the conveniences of our times in good measure.

The need for providing for the disabled worker over 50 years of age should need no further justification. Such a worker, whose employable years are cut short by accident, should not be faced with a lifetime of destitution and despair. The misfortune which afflicted his life is one which by chance we may have missed. Certainly the workers of America who will all be entitled to the privilege of this benefit, if a disability should strike them, should have no objection to assuming in some way the cost of providing for the less fortunate members of our working society.

Early in the second session of the 84th Congress I made plans to bring the Housing Subcommittee to Cleveland to conduct hearings on the housing problems which afflict our area. These problems stem from the high cost of housing in Cleveland, resulting from high housing construction costs and from the low FHA appraisals on both new and older properties. This condition has forced many purchasers of homes in Cleveland into high second, third, and fourth mortgages and into the purchase of dwelling places on land contracts. The costs of this kind of housing were so great that the owners of such property were forced to violate zoning laws by unlawfully dividing housing into multiple units and by overcrowding them. Up to the time of the Housing Subcommittee hearing in Cleveland no progress was seemingly made on the effort to get Garden Valley and the Cleveland urban renewal work underway. After these hearings, Washington was prompt with action and the first work was undertaken. As a result of the Cleveland housing hearing, evidence was accumulated to make improvements in the Housing Act and to make home ownership easier.

Numerous times throughout the session, in committee and on the floor, I opposed the unwarranted granting of quick tax amortization write-offs which were being made by the Office of Defense Mobilization to numerous industries throughout the Nation. I attacked the write-offs on the basis that they transferred a greater portion of the tax burden on to the taxpayers who were certainly less able to pay. While quick tax write-offs are still authorized by law, I believe that they will be terminated by the next Congress and that the result will be the development of a more equitable tax system.

During this spring, I also fought for restrictions on the exportation of scrap to foreign nations. In my judgment the Administration had been authorizing the shipment to foreign nations of unwarranted supplies of our scrap at a rate which increased by almost 500 percent in the past year. This has caused the current supply of scrap to shrink and has caused the prices to rise in the domestic steel markets. The result showed up in the increased cost of finished steel products. The real danger existed in the tremendous supplies of our scrap which were going to foreign countries, some of whom could transship the scrap to nations unfriendly to us. The experience of World War II might be repeated when American sailors and soldiers were killed with steel made from American scrap.

In the course of the session I made every effort to call to the attention of the public the unwarranted attack on our income tax laws by former Commissioner T. Coleman Andrews who was more interested in his legal client than in any loyalty to the United States Government. It was my belief that his attack was part of a national scheme to destroy the income tax to the advantage of the large income group rather than any other peoples in our economy.

In the course of this session there were numerous other tasks, such as the support for authorization of the Pan American Games to be held in Cleveland in 1959, the clearing up of the Brancato immigration fiasco, and for numerous important immigration cases which had to be resolved.

I exercised every effort to oppose the Administration's desire to increase the cost of first-class mail from 3 cents to 4 cents. From all of the evidence which was submitted, I was convinced that the first-class mail was operating at a profit and that the postal deficit was brought about by the high cost of 2d-, 3d-, and 4th-class mail—otherwise known as the junk mail. It appeared to me that the magazine publishers of the country were attempting to push the burden of the mail cost on to the user of ordinary first-class mail. Until the high cost 2d-, 3d-, and 4th-class mail assumed a greater portion of their mail charges, it was my belief that first-class mail should remain unchanged.

With respect to veterans legislation, I supported the legislation which increased disabled veterans' pensions by approximately 10 percent. The last increase of 5 percent made by the past Congress was inadequate and unrealistically out of line with the rising cost of living. I also supported the increase in the pension plan for the veterans of World War I. It seemed to me that this legislation would have filled a great need in our economy and would have been very important to thousands of residents of my district. I regret that these measures did not become law.

It was my privilege to participate extensively in the civil rights debate of 1956. Although this legislation left untouched a large area of civil rights, I felt that it was the minimum step in the right direction that should be made by this Congress. On four occasions I took the floor of the House of Representatives to urge the adoption of this important legislation.

It is unfortunate that the education privileges of the GI bill of rights was not extended by this session of Congress. This Nation is stronger and more productive because of the tremendous educational program which was made possible for World War II and Korea veterans. With the struggle between communism and democracy now shifting to the educational front, it is more important than ever that we provide for a comprehensive program of educating our people of all ages for greater productivity, for the development of better family life, for the national security, and for increasing duties of citizenship.

In the closing days of the session, the RECORD is filled with my activity as a more seasoned Member of the House of Representatives. I enjoyed the privilege of debate and heartily participated in all activities which make up the legislative process. To the Members of the 84th Congress my time as a "new man" was not very long.

In the next several months I will have a greater opportunity to take care of the many personal inquiries which have been made to me by the citizens of the 21st District of Ohio. It will be my intention to be in my Federal building office almost daily between now and the end of the year. The office is in room 506 of the Federal Building on Cleveland's Public Square. The telephone number is CHerry 1-7900. My staff and I will make every effort to carefully study any problem or question which is submitted, and I will personally endeavor to see every person who calls. This is difficult work, but it is the essence of democracy, and it is one of the functions of the Congressman to translate the tremendous affairs of the Federal Government in the most courteous and understanding way to every citizen. It is the citizen who counts because from him all power and responsibility in Government flows.

After the conclusion of regular office hours, it will be my desire to personally visit and call upon as many families as I possibly can. In this effort I will at least endeavor to visit every street in my community. I will talk to workers and housewives, the senior citizens and young people. If it is my destiny to continue to legislate, it is my obligation to know my community, to learn its problems and to be dedicated to their solution. Some of the best ideas which were given to me on my work were supplied by persons who least suspected they were setting in motion and stimulating a force in legislative life. Give me your problems and your ideas for their solution, for from these things laws are made.

CIVILIZATION'S GREATEST DANGER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, in these closing hours of the second session of the 84th Congress, I want to once again reiterate my stand against communism.

The greatest menace to our country and to freemen everywhere is this deadly poisonous attitude of the Communists. Communism is the most demoralizing and debasing influence that the world has known since the crucifixion of Christ on Calvary's Cross.

I want to warn the administration against the "new look" of the Soviet Union. Their pretended friendship is really a subterfuge. To me this is a real attack to lull us to sleep and to try to catch us napping at the switch. The Russians' relentless drive in the Near East and in Egypt is proof that this "new look" is far more deadly than has ever been the menace of war. Announcement this morning of the seizure of the Suez Canal by Egypt is merely another step to world power by the Communists through its satellite countries. All America should be on guard. Especially should the administration be on the alert while Congress is in adjournment. Now is the time for good Christian people to be militant and watchful. Communism is anti-Christian and anti-religious.

Because Communists want to rule the world, they start with the individual, work up through communities, states and nations. If they can control our Nation, the world is theirs. They have proved this by gradually taking over the satellite countries in Eastern Europe and now they are taking over the Middle East by working through native Communist Parties in the countries they seize.

Nevertheless, the power of control is centered in Moscow.

The American people reject wholeheartedly the Communist Party and its leaders. But we must never cease our efforts to eliminate and destroy its influence. The hostilities of our people have driven the Communist Party underground. Yet it continues its menace through organizations and individuals.

The seeds of communism are planted in our schools, the entertainment world, political organizations, labor unions or any organization in which they think they can get a foothold.

The Communist Party is trying to get the loyal citizens of the Nation to do their work for them. They are intent in exercising power behind the scenes to influence policy, to initiate "peace" petitions and to protest against national defense measures. Its insidious campaign to infiltrate every segment of our people is its main weapon. Every American citizen must be on the alert against this relentless foe. Communism completely lacks morals and ethics. Peace to the Communists means the destruction of all opposition.

And may Almighty God in His infinite wisdom and glory give us the strength and unity and foresight to work as a united people against this relentless foe which if, by any chance (may God forbid) they should become victorious, freedom and liberty as we know it would be abolished a thousand years. Therefore, let each of us consider it our sacred duty as a loyal citizen and a Christian to be on guard at all times in every community throughout this land.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

To all Americans as well as those here in Congress, I direct this request to pause a few minutes to review and reflect upon the past and present major pieces of legislation affecting the welfare of American veterans.

For the first time, a program of readjustment benefits was established by the 78th Congress and approved by President Roosevelt to aid returning veterans of World War II in readjustment to civilian life. This masterpiece, commonly referred to as the "GI bill," established a program of educational assistance, vocational training for the service disabled, unemployment compensation, mustering out pay, and home and business loans. The 82d Congress, with approval of President Truman, extended these benefits to veterans of Korean service—medical, hospital and domiciliary care, burial benefits and compensation or pension for disabled veterans and dependents of the deceased.

More than 7,800,000 veterans received education and training under the World War II program, and nearly one and one-half million veterans have entered the educational and training program under provisions of the act established for veterans of Korean service. This program has enabled millions of veterans to obtain a college education who otherwise would not have been able to do so and has helped countless others to overcome their physical handicaps and thereby become self-sustaining. Most national leaders agree that the readjustment programs, in spite of their high costs, have been economically sound and have materially increased the earning capacity of the veteran population.

The Veterans' Administration in a recent release to United Press sets the cost of the training program at $14.5 billion and is being repaid rapidly in the form of larger income tax payments. A VA survey shows that the average income of veterans who trained under the bill is up 51 percent above that of the past 6 years while that of nonveterans in the same age group has increased only 19 percent. The VA estimates these veterans are paying $1 billion a year more in income taxes as a result of greater earning ability. "At this rate," the Agency said, "the Government's investment will be returned in about 15 years."

An additional and more intangible benefit which cannot be measured in terms of dollar value results from the creation of an educated citizenry that is better qualified to cope with our numerous social and political problems.

In 1940 Congress enacted the National Service Life Insurance Act, thereby enabling every person who served in World War II to purchase low-cost life insurance in the maximum amount of $10,000. More than 22 million policies of life insurance were issued under this act and nearly 6 million of them are now in force. In 1951 Congress enacted the Servicemen's Indemnity Act, under which every person in the Armed Forces during the period of the Korean conflict was given $10,000 of the gratuitous indemnity insurance without cost. Congress also supplemented this protection to the dependents of those who died in service or from service connected causes by materially increasing the rates of death compensation payable to widows, orphans, and dependent parents. A service pension for widows of World War I veterans where the death was not connected with service was first established by Congress in 1944. Widows became entitled to pensions without the necessity of showing the veteran had a service-connected disability at the time of death. More than 320,000 World War I widows are now drawing pension under this act.

When Congress provided benefits for Korean veterans the service period established was from June 27, 1950 to such date as might be determined by concurrent resolution of the Congress or Presidential proclamation.

On January 1, 1955, President Eisenhower issued an Executive order terminating the Korean service period as of January 31, 1955. Many in service prior to the issuance of the Executive order had enlisted in reliance upon the promise of a 4-year college education under the Korean GI bill for 2 full years of service. This benefit would have been denied thousands who entered the service because of the assurance of a college education had it not been for the prompt action of the 84th Congress, which enacted Public Law 7, which became effective on February 15, 1955, and permitted the accrual of educational benefits by all who were in the service prior to the January 31, 1955, termination date.

The hospital and medical program of the Veterans' Administration has been improved and expanded. Medical services are now provided through 173 VA hospitals and 70 outpatient clinics. As of January 31, 1956, there were 121,163 hospital beds in operation which represents an increase of 4,131 beds since July 1, 1954. The 84th Congress has also been responsible for a replacement, modernization, and improvement program which will assure the continuance of high-quality medical care through the Veterans' Administration. This program has scheduled the large-scale modernization of 58 existing hospitals, with minor improvements in 16 others.

In addition, the House of Representatives, of this 84th Congress, has passed a bill materially increasing existing benefits for the survivors of those who died in the Armed Forces or from service-connected causes and has approved legislation to provide a college education for children of those who died from a disability incured in combat or by an instrumentality of war. These measures have now both become law.

But the job of this—the 84th Congress—is not done.

There is still unfinished veterans legislation; the bill for increased compensation for our disabled veterans and the pension bill for the older veterans of World War I.

When Old Glory called her soldiers to serve, they were there in full force, on land, on sea, in the air, and beneath the waves, prepared to face the onslaught of the enemy from any direction. They gave their sweat, their blood, their all. Many never came back, leaving behind them widows and fatherless children who look to America, to this Congress, for help and encouragement. There were those who came back, injured and maimed, disillusioned and without hope. There were those who came back with renewed hope and eager to pick up the reins where they had dropped them. All of these, sick, or well, discouraged or inspired, look to us, the Members of this Congress, for courage and assistance. We cannot let them down.

Yes, we have done well by our veterans. But there is more to be done. Before this 84th Congress adjourns we must act—here and now—upon the bill for increased compensation for our disabled and the World War I pension bill.

I agree wholeheartedly with my honorable colleague, Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS of Massachusetts, who, like a true soldier, recently said on this floor:

> During the war our soldiers were expendable. We must not let the veterans become expendable today.

Let us complete the job today—and tomorrow Old Glory will wave a little higher and a little brighter.

RELIEF OF DISTRESSED ECONOMIC AREAS

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to bring to the attention of the House, to the more than 100 Members of the House, who represent areas classified as distressed economic areas in 15 States in the Nation, and at the same time to bring this matter to the attention of the people in my district, as well as the people in other congressional districts suffering acute unemployment, and to all the people in the country the tragedy of this session.

I regret that in these closing hours of this session of Congress, I must strike this note of disharmony. But strike it I must, because the failure of the administration and the Republican leadership of the House to agree by unanimous consent to permit the aid to distressed areas bill to be called up under suspension of the rules, prevented the passage in this session of that bill.

The Douglas-Flood bill introduced last year in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. DOUGLAS, and by myself in the House and with many bills for the same purpose introduced by dozens of Members from both sides of the aisle. I say, Mr. Speaker, such a bill passed the Senate 2 days ago with a 60–30 vote. I immediately moved and obtained the consent of the majority leadership of the House, the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], and the Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to have this bill called up in the House under the suspension of the rules. Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. MCCORMACK advised me they would do so, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, would agree. I immediately contacted the two gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. FENTON] and enlisted their aid in view of the fact that both Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. FENTON represent such distressed economic areas, and each had introduced similar bills this year. The bills introduced by Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. FENTON were the administration bills to meet this problem, and were introduced immediately after President Eisenhower, in his message to Congress, urged the passage of this legislation. I was advised by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, that an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Corwin, stated the administration would not accept the Douglas-Flood bill. I talked to the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Weeks, on the telephone immediately, acquainted him with the situation as I have outlined herein above, and he said he would dispatch his assistant, Mr. Mueller, to the Capitol at once, to discuss the matter at my suggestion with Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. FENTON. This was done.

Two hours later, Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. FENTON advised me that the administration was adamant and against any bill whatsoever. They advised the administration leadership at the Department of Commerce and in the House that the important thing for millions of people who would benefit by this bill was to get any bill on the floor of the House under the suspension of the rules so that it could be sent to conference with the Senate for the vital purpose of bringing aid to the distressed economic areas in the Nation and to pass the Congress before adjournment. The Democratic leadership was advised by me of each one of these steps hour by hour during the last 2 days of this session.

The Democratic leadership even agreed to call up on the floor for final passage, under suspension of the rules, the administration bill, the very bill the President asked the Congress to pass on this problem. The Department of Commerce spokesman and the Republican leadership of the House refused even to agree to consider the administration bill as proposed by the President.

I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, because as you know, many times during this session I supported important legislation requests by the President, and fought for it in the Appropriations Committee and on the floor of this House, when those bills were frequently opposed by the Republican leadership and by many Republican Members.

Again, for the past 48 hours, I have been working day and night pleading with the administration leaders here to agree to report out their own bill for aid to distressed areas. This they have consistently refused to do, and therefore upon them must rest the responsibility for our utter, complete, and total failure in this session to pass a bill to bring aid to distressed economic areas of the Nation.

I have been in this Congress for a number of years, but never in my experience could I believe that this would happen. It was a bitter disappointment to my Republican friends in the House from distressed areas who know the need and wanted this bill as much as I did, and it is a crying shame that the administration leadership who were 100 percent against this bill, once more rejected a direct request from their own President, refused to cooperate and join with the Democratic leadership after the Senate had passed such a bill, in permitting a bill, not just the Senate bill, but any bill, including their own administration bill, to be voted on.

I challenge the Republican leadership and any member of the administration, and any Member of Congress, Republican or Democrat, to deny these statements. But they cannot be denied, for these are the facts.

I pledge to the people of my district, to the people of all districts where there is acute unemployment, to my colleagues representing those districts, Republican and Democrat, that the first thing I shall do when the 85th Congress convenes in January, is to reintroduce this same legislation with confidence that then it will become law.

I want to emphasize that this was a completely bipartisan operation between a handful of Republican Members in affected districts, and with myself and my Democratic colleagues from similar areas and the Democratic leadership of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I indict the administration and the Republican leadership of the House for the adamant refusal to permit this legislation to be called for a vote under suspension of the rules today.

AMENDING THE IMMIGRATION LAWS

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Masachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the closing hour of the 84th Congress is drawing near, and to this minute the House and the Senate have not agreed to iron out differences on legislation that would give relief to minority groups now handicapped from bringing their relatives and friends to the United States.

Early in the first session of this Congress I joined with Senator SALTONSTALL in filing identical bills, H. R. 2558 and S. 519, which would correct many of the inequities in the so-called McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. Our bill provides for the pooling of unused quotas and their allocation the next succeeding year to those waiting lists of quotas 7,000 and under, including the Italian, Greek, Dutch, Austrian, Polish, Lithuanian, and other Eastern European quotas. Our bills would make the immigration laws more fair and workable. The McCarran Act established immigration quotas on the basis of the 1920 rather than the 1950 census. H. R. 2558 and S. 519 would eliminate discrimination against cultural and racial groups, which have become increasingly important parts of our community in the last 36 years, by establishing quotas on the basis of the 1950 census. The bills would bar Communists, Nazis, and Fascists from this country without the necessity of proving, as is now necessary, that they have advocated the establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship in the United States. In addition, the bill establishes a Board of Visa Appeals in the State Department to review denials of visas and the regulations applying to immigration.

Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that amendments such as these have not been made to the McCarran Act. However, the immigration and nationality laws have been modified in various respects by H. R. 6888 which passed the Senate today with amendments. Section 5 of the Dirksen amendment is particularly desirable, for it deals with redistribution of the unused quota numbers at the end of a fiscal year. This is substantially the same provision that we had written into our bills.

It is so late in the session now that it would appear that this is the best bill amending the immigration and nationality laws that we can get through Congress. I urge the House to accept the Senate amendments so that this year, at least, we can start admitting more men, women, and children to our shores from Eastern and Southern Europe.

BUILDING THE PATH TO PEACE AND A RICHER WORLD

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the hour for our adjournment draws near. The 84th Congress soon will become a part of the history of these United States of America. I am proud to have shared in its deliberations and I am humbly grateful to the men and women of the Second District of Illinois for the opportunity they gave me of using the authority of their vote in helping to build the path to the tomorrow of peace, of good will and of broadened horizons of life for everyone.

We have come a long way in the 84th Congress in the building of that path to a richer tomorrow. To every nation, as to every person, is given by divine providence a mission. Always mankind looks upward, and the climb is toward the heights. It is the mission of our country, now charged with world responsibility, to open new and loftier heights and to ease the climb.

Ahead is a world without poverty, a world without hatreds, a world in which man can live at peace with his fellow man and in the dignity intended for all the children of God. The 84th Congress has made its contribution to that end.

ATTENDED EVERY SESSION

Mr. Speaker, I have attended every session of the 84th Congress. As in the 83d Congress, I have answered all rollcalls. Each day as I have approached the Capitol, my eyes fixed untiringly and strengtheningly on the beautiful and inspiring dome, I have voiced a quiet prayer that in the deliberations and votes of the day I should represent to the full extent of my ability the thinking and the aspirations of all the quarter of a million men and women and children in the district that three times has honored me with the delegation of casting its vote in the greatest deliberative body in the world. I have felt that any day would be a lost day unless it marked some progress, small or large, toward the heights for which we are reaching.

FIGHT AGAINST DISEASE

The Democratic 84th Congress will be remembered long after we are gone as the Congress that prepared the way for the final conquering of dread diseases, those of cancer and of heart included. We have authorized the greatest program of medical research ever undertaken by any nation in any age of the world's history. From this will result, as sure as day follows the night, the ultimate lifting from the homes of America, and of the world, of the tormenting fear of illnesses, for which there now is no remedy, striking down the loved ones in our family circles. We have prolonged the span of human life, not only for our own people but for those of all other lands.

This is the true way to peace on earth. When from the study and the research, resulting from the program we have mapped, the cures are found for ailments, now incurable and we share our knowledge with other peoples then indeed will the name of the United States be blessed.

In my active support of this frontal attack on the physical ills that plague our people I am confident that I have truly represented, as they would have wished it, the people of the Second District of Illinois. I shall report to them, equally confident of their approval, my support of an extension and enlargement of the school milk program, of medical and dental care of our school children, and of the free distribution of polio vaccine.

SPIRITUAL WELL-BEING

The physical well-being of our people is the proper concern of the Congress. The spiritual well-being also is of concern. The Congress has recognized that we are a nation under God by placing that affirmation in our pledge to the flag, by setting aside a room for meditation and prayer for Members of the Congress, and one of the laws of the 84th Congress commands that all coins and currency of our country there shall appear the words "In God We Trust."

BUILDING NATIONAL FAMILY

The 84th Congress will be remembered long after we are gone as the Congress that prepared the way for the elimination of sectionalism and the uniting at long last of all our people into one national family. When people meet and know one another differences not of character dissolve. In enacting the largest public works program in history, that providing for a $33 billion highway construction, the 84th Congress did more than any other Congress in our history to unite into one family the American people. With the completion of this program, making easily and quickly accessible one section of the country to all others, one State of the Union will be to the family of the Nation not as a separate and removed residence but as one room in a family home of 48 rooms.

REAL HEMISPHERIC SOLIDARITY

The 84th Congress also provided for the quick completion of the Pan-American Highway, so that soon from Alaska to the Panama Canal, and later I vision to the tip of South America, there will flow unendingly a stream of travelers, coming and going, getting really to know peoples in sections and lands visited, and thus cementing in understanding the bonds that unite.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the way to peace. It is this that will keep the peoples of this hemisphere in a unity as strong and enduring as the Rock of Gibraltar. This is one of the proud accomplishments of the Democratic 84th Congress.

OPPOSED SADDLING WITH DEBT

Mr. Speaker, I think at this point I should make some comment on why I could not and did not support the administration's original highway construction bill. I do not believe that one generation has for its own advantage the moral right to mortgage generations as yet unborn. The progress made by each generation should be paid for by the toil and the sacrifices of that generation. It is only when war comes, and national survival requires the departure from rules of prudence, that debts morally may be acquired that carry over into succeeding generations.

The administration bill provided for the $33 billion construction with money raised from the sale of bonds. That meant an interest charge of over $1 billion a year continuing indefinitely. Recently in my own State of Illinois a bond issue was sold to finance a new turnpike. The bonds have been sold, and the people of Illinois are now paying $50,000 a day in interest even though work on the turnpike construction is still far from the starting stage. Had the administration's bill been accepted this would have resulted on the national level to a devastating extent.

In prudence and in honor I felt we should pay for our highway construction as we went along, and thus avoid its financing becoming a weight around our necks to strangle our future. Happily, the Democratic bill was adopted. It provides for paying as we go and on a fair basis of use and abuse.

CONGRESS WITH A HEART

Mr. Speaker, my time is almost gone, and I must hurry along. There is not time remaining to mention the many other achievements of the 84th Congress, including the increase of the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 an hour and the liberalizing of the social security provisions. I do wish before closing to mention some matters especially of interest and concern to my own constituents.

CAL-SAG A DREAM COME TRUE

In the campaign of 1954 I presented to my constituents what I termed a positive program for Chicago. The items included the Calumet-Sag Channel, water diversion, and Federal aid against beach erosion. The 84th Congress both in its 1st and 2d sessions made appropriations assuring the early completion of the great and important inland waterway so vital to Chicago's future. In the three Congresses of which I have been a Member, Cal-Sag has commanded my unceasing effort. I am very, very happy that the 84th Congress has made the dream come true.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER DIVERSION

The 84th Congress passed in both the 1st and 2d sessions the Lake Michigan water diversion bill; and I am very glad to have a part in cooperation with my colleagues from the Cook County area, both Democratic and Republicans working as a perfect team under the leadership and inspiration of the beloved Congressman O'BRIEN. The bill we passed in the 1st session the President vetoed. The bill we passed in the 2d session is now on the President's desk. Whatever action he shall take is of course within his determination. We in the Congress have done our part, and all the members of our delegation on both sides of the aisle share in the credit. There are no politics in serving Chicago.

I am happy too that the 84th Congress made substantial progress in the matter of controlling beach erosion and water pollution.

CLASSICS OF DEMOCRACY

To the leadership and my colleagues I extend my deep thanks for the support so generously given me, and for which I always shall be grateful, in two matters in which mine was the responsibility of initiation and advocacy. I refer to the program for making available to all peoples the classics of American democracy, translated into all languages and printed in inexpensive editions, and to the provision in the Housing Act of 1956 reimbursing small-business tenants, displaced by urban redevelopment plans, for moving expenses up to $2,000 and displaced individuals and families up to $100.

It is good, Mr. Speaker, to contemplate that at this moment, when the gavel is soon to fall on the deliberations of the 84th Congress that adopted the classics of democracy program, that the works that inspired our forefathers are actually reaching in translated editions the peoples of the world and we are on our way to winning the war for the minds and hearts of people everywhere. This is the true road to peace.

AID TO DISPLACED TENANTS

It is good to know, Mr. Speaker, that small-business tenants and families that are thrown out of old locations and homes by the march of progress in the rebuilding of our cities can find in the Federal Government an understanding of their problems and at least some relief in meeting the expenses of moving to new locations.

Mr. Speaker, I am humbly grateful to the Providence that guides our course for the opportunity of participating in the good works of a good Congress and with the diligence made possible by desire and by good health, of serving to the utmost of my ability the constituents who three times have voted me the priceless honor of their confidence.

With God's help, wherever we serve may we continue to follow the path to a true peace and a richer world for all.

HOUSE BILLS DISAPPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The message further announced that the President had disapproved the following bills of the House; his reasons for such actions are as follows:

IMPROVEMENT OF PRIVATE PROPERTY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

H. R. 4993. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 4993, to authorize the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit certain improvements to two business properties situated in the District of Columbia.

The two properties involved, owned by private corporations, are occupied as gasoline filling stations in a residential use district. Under the zoning regulations promulgated pursuant to the act of March 1, 1920, as amended by the act of June 20, 1938, the two stations may be continued as such in the category of nonconforming uses because they were in existence prior to the enactment of the zoning statute. However, except under certain conditions, these nonconforming uses cannot be physically extended, enlarged, or improved. At present there are approximately 5,000 nonconforming uses in the District of Columbia.

The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the National Capital Planning Commission have had underway for the past 3 years a study looking to a complete revision of the zoning regulations for the District of Columbia. That study is almost completed, and when completed will doubtless include provisions dealing with the problem of nonconforming uses. We should not single out two of these now by special legislation and provide benefits for them which cannot be enjoyed by any of the other many nonconforming uses. To do so would constitute an invitation for other special legislative exceptions which, if enacted, could frustrate comprehensive planning and make impossible the orderly development of the Federal City.

LAKE MICHIGAN, DIVERSION OF WATER

H. R. 3210. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 3210, to authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway, and for other purposes.

This bill is substantially the same in purpose and effect as H. R. 3300 of the 83d Congress from which I also withheld my approval in that it would authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago to increase from 1,500 to 2,500 cubic feet per second the diversion of water from Lake Michigan to the Illinois Waterway for a period of 3 years. H. R. 3210 would also direct the Secretary of the Army to make a study with respect to the effect of the diversion and to make recommendations regarding its continuance. While certain conditions and limitations are imposed that were not in the earlier bill these do not deal with the fundamental reasons for my withholding approval of that measure.

In my memorandum of disapproval of H. R. 3300 I stated, among other things:

> I am unable to approve the bill because * * * (2) all methods of control of lake levels and protection of property on the Great Lakes should be considered before arbitrarily proceeding with the proposed increased diversion, (3) the diversions are authorized without reference to negotiations with Canada, and (4) the legitimate interests of other States affected by the diversion may be adversely affected.

A comprehensive report by the Corps of Engineers which will include consideration of the best methods of obtaining improved control of the levels of the Great Lakes and of preventing recurrence of damage along the shores is nearing completion. I am asking the Secretary of Defense to expedite completion of this report. This report is in addition to the technical report on the effects of an increased diversion into the Illinois Waterway which has been made by the Joint Lake Ontario Engineering Board to the International Joint Commission. I think it would be unwise to proceed with the diversion in the manner proposed in H. R. 3210 until all relevant information has been obtained, particularly since objections to the proposed diversion have been registered by the Canadian Government in its note dated February 13, 1956, and additional objections filed by legal advisers of the States of Wisconsin, Ohio, and New York.

Although I am fully aware of the seriousness of some of the problems confronting the Chicago area and the State of Illinois, the record on H. R. 3210 affords no basis for me to change my position in this matter. Accordingly, under the circumstances, I am convinced that the bill should not be approved.

I am asking the State Department to engage in discussions with the Canadian Government in an attempt to work out a solution to these problems as soon as all pertinent facts are available.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1956.

TAXES, REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS

H. R. 4392. I am withholding my approval from H. R. 4392, entitled "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a special method of taxation for real-estate investment trusts."

Under existing law, real-estate trusts and associations with transferable shares are generally taxed as ordinary corporations on their entire taxable income. The enrolled bill would extend to such organizations, under certain conditions, the conduit or pass-through method of taxation which present law provides for regulated investment companies. The effect would be to exclude from the corporate tax all but a small margin of retained earnings of real-estate trusts.

While the bill assumes a similarity between real-estate trusts and regulated investment companies, there are important differences between the two situations. The income of regulated investment companies is generally derived from the securities of corporations which are fully subject to the corporate income tax. In the case of regulated investment companies, therefore, the conduit treatment merely avoids an additional level of corporate taxation, which for dividend income consists of the tax on the portion of dividends remaining after the 85 percent intercorporate dividends deduction. By contrast, the conduit treatment proposed for real-estate trusts would entirely remove the corporate income tax from much of the income originating in their real-estate operations.

It is by no means clear how far a new provision of this sort might be applied. Though intended to be applicable only to a small number of trusts, it could, and might well become, available to many real-estate companies which were originally organized and have always carried on their activities as fully taxable corporations.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1956.

TAXES, ROYALTIES ON PATENTS AND COPYRIGHTS

H. R. 7643. I am withholding my approval of H. R. 7643, "An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to foreign tax credit for United Kingdom income tax paid with respect to royalties and other like amounts." This bill would extend to firms with a permanent establishment in the United Kingdom that receive royalties there a credit for taxes imposed by the United Kingdom on the payer of the royalties. This provision would be retroactive to 1950.

Under the income tax convention with the United Kingdom royalties received by a United States licensor are not subject to tax in the United Kingdom if the recipient has no permanent establishment there. If it does have a permanent establishment, the royalty is subject to British taxation. The American recipient reports the net amount of royalties from British sources and receives no United States tax credit for the British tax paid. This treatment under United States law arises from two court decisions (Trico Products Corp. (46 BTA 346, affirmed 137 F. (2d) 424, cert. den. 320 U. S. 799, reh. den. 321 U. S 801); Irving Air Chute Co. Inc. (1 T. C. 880, affirmed 143 F. (2d) 256, cert. den. 323 U. S. 773)).

The combined effect of the United States income tax law and the income tax convention with the United Kingdom is to produce a different combination of British and United States taxes on the royalties paid some American recipients than on others. However, the United States tax law is not the cause of this difference in treatment. It is caused by the provisions in the convention itself. The appropriate way to correct the situation would be modification of the convention. The Treasury Department currently is conducting discussions on the convention with the British and will add this problem to the agenda.

The present status of royalty payments from the United Kingdom to the United States has been well known to interested parties at least since the convention was adopted in 1945. Many arrangements between licensees and licensors have reflected existing law and the burden of British tax may not rest on United States licensors in such cases. Consequently, to allow the British tax as a credit against the United States tax on a retroactive basis would give a windfall gain to some American licensors.

The proposed change would single out for special relief a small group of taxpayers whose need for relief has not been demonstrated. Tax relief should not be given in this way.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1956.

PUBLIC WORKS, RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS

H. R. 12080. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 12080, which would authorize appropriations totaling about $1.6 billion for 99 projects or project modifications and 14 river-basin authorizations involving improvements for navigation, shore protection, flood control, and related purposes. I regret that this action is necessary, because I believe that the periodic enactment of river and harbor and flood-control legislation is an important step in the formulation of a sound Federal program for the wise development of the Nation's water resources.

This bill does not appropriate funds. It only authorizes certain projects or project modifications, so that the next Congress can consider them for appropriation. So my action on the bill need cause no delay in starting the many worthwhile projects in the bill.

While the majority of the projects which this bill would authorize have been given adequate study and review within the executive branch and by the affected States, there are still a large number which have not been reviewed in accordance with the orderly procedures set forth in the applicable laws. Therefore, it is not possible at this time for me to determine whether their authorization would be in the public interest. Still others have, after review, been found not to be in the public interest.

Existing law requires that before a report of the Chief of Engineers recommending authorization of a project is submitted to the Congress the affected States be afforded an opportunity to comment on the proposal. In addition, procedures for review consistent with other statutory requirements have been established under Executive Order 9384. These procedures provide for review of project reports within the executive branch before they are submitted to the Congress. For 32 of the projects which the bill would authorize, involving financial commitments of over $530 million, all of these requirements have not been met. Without such review, the Congress must necessarily have acted on the basis of incomplete information. Some of these projects have not even been studied and reported on by the Chief of Engineers, and in a few cases field studies have not yet been completed.

Section 202 of the River and Harbor and Flood Control Act of 1954 declares it to be the policy of Congress that:

> No project or any modification not authorized, of a project for flood control or rivers and harbors, shall be authorized by the Congress unless a report for such project or modification has been previously submitted by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in conformity with existing law.

I regard this as being a wise policy, and I believe that it is very unfortunate that this traditional statement was not followed in H. R. 12080.

In various messages to the Congress I have clearly stated my view that our vital water resources can best be conserved and utilized in the public interest if the Federal Government cooperates with State and local governments and with private interests in the development of those resources, and does not undertake such development as though it were a matter of exclusive Federal interest. In order to carry out such a policy properly and effectively, it is necessary that the views of affected States be given adequate consideration in formulating proposals for water resources projects. This has not been accomplished for a number of projects included in this bill.

In addition, other projects in this bill would be authorized on a basis which would result in a lesser degree of local participation than was agreed to by the local interests and recommended by the executive branch. I believe that authorization of water resources projects on such terms would represent a serious backward step in the desirable development of the Nation's water resources, and would result in the loss of the best test yet devised for insuring that a project is sound—the willingness of local people to invest their own money in a joint enterprise with the Federal Government.

In the weeks before the Congress convenes a careful, orderly review will be undertaken of those projects and other provisions of the bill which have not been fully studied or reviewed at the present time. This should enable the Congress to base its action on a full knowledge of all the facts involved. I believe that the people of the United States are entitled to expect that these procedures will be followed before new water resources projects, invôlving large future financial commitments, are authorized in law.

BRIDGE COMMISSIONS, LAWRENCEBURG AND CANNELTON

H. R. 10468 and H. R. 10662. I am withholding my approval from H. R. 10468 and H. R. 10662, bills creating the City of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission and the City of Cannelton Bridge Commission, respectively. The City of Lawrenceburg Bridge Commission would be authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Boone County, Ky., and to purchase and operate a ferry at this location. The City of Cannelton Bridge Commission would be granted comparable authority with respect to a bridge and a ferry at or near Cannelton, Ind., and Hawesville, Ky.

On July 26, 1956, I approved H. R. 11010, creating a Muscatine Bridge Commission and authorizing it to perform functions similar to those contemplated by H. R. 10468 and H. R. 10662. At that time I indicated that I would not be inclined to approve the creation of bridge commissions of the type contemplated by that bill in the absence of special emergency circumstances. Because the city of Muscatine, Iowa, and the town of Drury, Ill., were confronted with a serious disruption of traffic as a result of the collapse of the center span of an existing bridge, and because it appeared that a bridge commission could most quickly undertake the construction of a new bridge, I signed the bill.

I am unaware of any circumstances which would make the provision of bridges at Lawrenceburg and Cannelton so urgent as to justify special Federal legislation creating additional bridge commissions. The construction and operation of interstate bridges, as I stated on July 26, has traditionally been a State rather than a Federal responsibility. The General Bridge Act of 1946 facilitated State action by granting blanket authority for the construction of bridges over navigable streams without the enactment of special authorizing legislation. In those cases in which the States choose to create special interstate agencies to build, maintain, and operate toll bridges, they may do so at any time through the negotiation of suitable interstate compacts. I am, therefore, unwilling, under ordinary circumstances, to have the Federal Government take away from the States and their highway agencies the responsibility for providing bridges of concern primarily to the residents of the immediate area to be served.

Bridge commissions of the type provided for by these bills also give rise to serious legal and administrative problems. Because they owe their creation and all of their powers to acts of Congress they cannot be State or local agencies. Yet they are not considered to be instrumentalities of the Federal Government. One result of this uncertainty is the lack of adequate provisions for supervising the activities of bridge commissions in the public interest. No State or Federal official or agency is empowered to see to it that the commissions proposed by H. R. 10468 and H. R. 10662 carry out their responsibilities in a faithful and efficient manner.

This lack of supervision can lead to serious mismanagement and injury to the public interest, as was recently disclosed by a congressional investigation of the affairs of the White County Bridge Commission. That investigation documented questionable expenditures of many thousands of dollars and led a select committee of the House of Representatives to propose drastic measures to prevent future abuses.

I, therefore, suggest that if the States of Indiana and Kentucky determine that these two bridges are needed, they enter into appropriate agreements to proceed with construction under the authority conferred by the General Bridge Act.

QUARTERLY REPORTS

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1956:

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the third calendar quarter 1955:

(NOTE.—The form used for reports is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

File two copies with the Secretary of the Senate and file three copies with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.
Place an "X" below the appropriate letter or figure in the box at the right of the "Report" heading below:
"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19_____	REPORT PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT	P	QUARTER 1st	2d	3d	4th
		(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) In General: This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee," state in Item "B" the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer." (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee.")
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer," write "None" as answer to Item "B."
(b) Separate Reports.—An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report.
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING.—(1) State name, address, and nature of business; (2) if this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers; except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—Section 302 (e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place ☐ an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed, in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description; (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution; (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this Item "C 4" and fill out Items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302 (a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the second calendar quarter of 1956:

(NOTE.—The form used for registration is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE THREE COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

		(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report.
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.
2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302 (e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C 4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

The Staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that this is the 30th anniversary of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation which was organized in 1926. This event certainly should not be permitted to pass unremarked. In the opinion of many students of government, the Joint Committee and its remarkable staff, headed by Mr. Colin F. Stam, is the outstanding example of the legislative process at its best.

I had the honor to be chairman of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in the 83d Congress. In addition, of course, as Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the same Congress, I had a unique opportunity to recognize and appreciate the extraordinary contribution to good legislation which that staff traditionally has made. Mr. Stam has been its chief since 1938 and during this period of almost unparalleled service to the Congress he has always performed his duties with tireless conscientiousness, with impartial fairness, and with unquestioned integrity.

The joint committee staff generally has furnished the entire technical assistance to both the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on every item of tax legislation, large and small, irrespective of which party happened to be in control of the Congress at any particular time. Thus, the staff has been a truly nonpartisan one, providing an extraordinary reservoir of professional talent available to all Members of the Congress regardless of party.

I know that many, many Members of both the House and the Senate are thoroughly familiar through personal experience with the extent and the caliber of the contribution which has been and is being made by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. There are others, perhaps, who have not had a similar opportunity to know the work of this staff and its chief, Mr. Stam. The staff is made up of some 26 individuals, professional and clerical. It has lawyers thoroughly experienced in the intricacies of the tax law. It has economists who are versed in the economic effects of tax policy and who study continuously the level of the Nation's economic activity in order that tax policy can be developed on a sound basis. It has expert accountants who are able to furnish invaluable information as to the practical application of tax rules in relation to actual business practice. It has statisticians able to provide information as to the revenue implications of tax proposals.

I would like to describe briefly the manner in which this remarkable staff assisted in developing the monumental new Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Throughout 1953, the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation was busy receiving suggestions for changes in the tax laws from individuals and groups throughout the country. It established staff subcommittees, made up jointly of personnel from the Treasury and Internal Revenue Service. These staff groups specialized in a large number of the more important aspects of taxation. They met with trade associations, business representatives, and professional and other groups for many months, and engaged with them in lengthy discussion of tax problems. In addition, of course, many suggestions for improvement in the tax laws were developed from within the Government itself. These many months of work by the staff were followed in January of 1954 by the submission of staff proposals to the Committee on Ways and Means. The committee had already held in the previous session some 6 weeks of public hearings at which literally hundreds of witnesses had testified. That great volume of public testimony had also been available to the joint committee staff in its labors. For about 6 weeks, starting in January of 1954, the committee met in executive session with the staff of the joint committee. Finally, a bill was prepared representing thousands of changes in the tax law. I have no hesitancy in saying that without the work of the staff of the joint committee and Mr. Stam, this extraordinary accomplishment would never have been possible.

Following consideration of the new Internal Revenue Code by the House of Representatives, the bill was referred in the Senate to its Committee on Finance. There the staff of the joint committee, again, became the technical advisory group. As a result, the tremendous experience which the staff had developed with this bill during its many months of work in the House was completely available to the other body. Finally, when the bill went to conference with a large number of Senate amendments, the joint committee staff assisted the conferees in working out the agreement which is represented today by that truly remarkable document, the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

This procedure which I have outlined above is one which is followed with respect to all tax legislation. I need hardly emphasize the great contribution to the legislative process which this procedure furnishes. The continuity of staff work between the House and the Senate makes possible, I am convinced, a better type of legislation than could otherwise be achieved.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone into some length with regard to the work of the joint committee staff, not only because it is singularly appropriate on this, the 30th anniversary of its organization, but also because there has been a recent tendency in some quarters to criticize its work. I can think of no greater disservice to the legislative branch than any effort to undermine the effectiveness of the joint committee staff. True, it is not a partisan staff. Therefore, I can understand the dissatisfaction of those who would prefer to conduct tax policy on a partisan basis. True, Mr. Speaker, the basic approach of this staff could be called middle of the road. As a result, I can again understand the dissatisfaction of those whose economic thinking is either far to the right or far to the left.

I believe that the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation under its chief, Mr. Colin Stam, is an institution of which this Congress should be proud, and one which it should maintain and strengthen.

Hon. Irwin D. Davidson

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, leaving Congress to go to the court of general sessions in New York as does IRWIN DAVIDSON is like going from one room into another. The closing is the opening door.

Irwin does not change—but the scene of his activities does. He would do well anywhere.

He returns to his old love—the courts from whence he came here. He made an enviable reputation in judicial circles; now he goes back once more to the milieu of the courts.

Although in Congress but one term, he has made his mark here. His uniform courtesy, his captivating humor, his keenness of perception, his clearness of expression, his high integrity of purpose, his kindness, his loyalty to his friends and colleagues are the facets of the jewel we call character.

I shall miss his quiet demeanor but pronounced wisdom which he brought with him to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Irwin, during his altogether too brief spell here, played the game. He quickly caught on to the deportment and carriage necessary to the makeup of a good Member. He never marred his record—only heightened it.

Before he voted on a measure, he studied and gave careful scrutiny to it. He always did his homework. He voted as his mind and heart dictated.

He had his eye, not on the next election, but on future generations.

He knows that the art of government is not easy to master. There are no scales to measure. Yet Irwin has mastered, measurably well, its perplexities and difficulties.

I am sure that in the congressional hurly-burly of debate he has learned much that will stand him in good stead as a judge. He has seen how on the anvil of discourse and discussion and debate we come a step closer to the truth. I am sure that his experience here will make him even more conscious of the dignity of the individual and his need to have a place in the sun. He will be better enabled to judge men, one from the other. He will have developed greater discernment and be better enabled to separate the wool from shoddy. He will have realized that talk sometimes is cheap; that the voluble one is not always wise; that the silent one may hold great learning. He will have realized that certain laws are immutable and cannot be breached with impunity.

We wish him well, albeit we shall miss him sorely.

Budget Estimates and Appropriations, 84th Congress

OF
HON. CLARENCE CANNON OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herewith certain tabulations dealing with work of the 84th Congress on appropriation bills as compared with budget estimates submitted by the President, and pertinent related facts.

The first tabulation is for the second session and is in usual form by bills, segregated as between fiscal years 1956 and 1957. The second table is similar, but in condensed form, for the 1st session of the 84th Congress. Permanent appropriations—those which recur automatically under substantive law without annual action in the appropriation bills—are included for sake of completeness but necessarily on an estimated basis at this time.

Comparison of estimates and appropriations, 84th Cong., 2d sess.

SUMMARY FOR THE SECOND SESSION

Budget estimates of appropriations submitted to the House during the second session totaled $60,324,834,365. Against these requests, the Committee on Appropriations submitted total recommendations of $58,972,415,005, a net reduction of $1,352,419,360. Bills as passed by the House totaled $58,584,521,885. Estimates considered by the Senate aggregated $61,143,478,537 and bills passed by that body totaled $61,535,048,950. Final amounts enacted total $60,573,217,590, a net of $570,260,947 below estimates of appropriations submitted by the President. In addition, rescissions of prior appropriations included in the several bills aggregate approximately $900 million bringing the total reduction of spending authority to about $1,470,260,947.

As to the net appropriation decrease of $570,260,947 below corresponding budget requests, several items need especially to be mentioned. In the Department of Defense bill, the Congress added $900 million not budgeted by the administration to accelerate B–52 and fighter plane production as vital to the readiness of our defense forces and to assure that we do not fall behind in missile and aircraft research and development. It will be recalled that the Government's expenditure reductions in the past 4 years have been largely in national security programs.

In the independent offices bill, the appropriation of the Government's share to the civil retirement fund is $230 million above the budget. The administration failed to include provision to meet the Government's share. By this increase, the Congress sought forthrightly to move the annual contribution toward the currently accruing level.

The budget for military public works construction, in the supplemental bill for 1957, included an item of transfer of $357 million from revolving funds in lieu of requesting direct appropriation. The effect was to hold down new requests and thus show apparent lower totals though in fact the spending requests were higher. The Congress decided the cleanest way was to rescind outright the idle funds and appropriate directly. Thus the increase on this account is apparent only.

BUDGET DEFICITS

Mr. Speaker, the administration is taking credit for a budget surplus for the fiscal year 1956 just closed. It is claiming that the 1952 campaign pledge of a balanced budget has been redeemed. The official administration announcement stated:

This means a great deal to the people of this country.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it does mean a great deal. It means that the surplus was achieved through burdensome taxes on individual taxpayers. It is only the ever-increasing national income which has spared the administration another year of fiscal embarrassment. It means, also, that it was not achieved by economy in Government as I shall conclusively show in a few moments. No credit is due for the achievement—in fact, it is not an achievement. It just happened. We have the largest national income in peacetime history. Practically every segment of the economy except the farmers are prospering—but paying heavily for it in high taxes and inflated dollars. That is why the budget was balanced. Real Government economy contributed nothing to the result; in fact, if we had real economy we could have a balanced budget and tax relief at the same time.

Here are the statistics to support these statements, taking from a tabulation released July 19 by the administration:

Budget receipts, expenditures, deficits, and surplus

[In billions]

	Actual, 1954	Actual, 1955	Actual, 1956
1. Receipts (net)	$64.7	$60.4	$68.1
2. Expenditures (net):
National security	48.2	42.6	42.1
All other items	19.6	22.0	24.3
Total	67.8	64.6	66.4
3. Deficit or surplus	−3.1	−4.2	+1.7

NOTE.—In fiscal 1951, under the previous administration, there was a surplus of $3.5 billion.

Mr. Speaker, these figures summarize the real record of expenditures in the first 3 years of the present administration, and show how claimed savings have been brought about. National security programs account for the savings—cut from $48.2 billion in 1954 to $42.1 billion in 1956. Much of that was to be expected once fighting stopped in Korea as President Truman so accurately prophesied in his last budget message submitted in January 1953. So no claim should be made that this decline constituted real savings of the kind the people were promised and had every right to expect. As a matter of fact, the Congress had found it necessary to restore some of these cuts as regards the vital airpower buildup.

What about the nondefense programs and agencies of Government? The figures speak for themselves—from $19.6 billion in 1954 to $24.3 in 1956, a whopping 24-percent increase. Where is the promised retrenchment? And what is even more disappointing, the administration proposes to keep on increasing expenditures. Up-to-date estimates for fiscal 1957 are not yet available, but last January's budget guess of $65.9 billion—at the time itself a shocking $1.6 billion above the prior year—is far below the mark if judged by what happened in fiscal 1956 and the unending stream of new spending proposals coming to the Capitol these past months and weeks. Fiscal 1957 spending might go up several billion more. Actual spending in 1956 turned out to be exactly $4 billion more than estimated by the President when he first submitted his budget for that year. And this is on top of the $1.8 billion increase in 1956 over 1955. This, and the almost certain further increases in fiscal 1957, constitutes a deplorable reversal, a running start in the other direction—upward.

The first session of the 84th Congress cut appropriation requests by $2 billion, thereby preventing that much of a drain on the Treasury. Further cuts in appropriations during the present session, though not of the same magnitude for reasons given, will aid further in this respect.

As noted, there is another side to budget results—taxes. Individual income tax collections rose from $32.4 billion in fiscal 1954 to $35.3 billion in fiscal 1956. In contrast corporation income taxes, during the same period, dropped from $21.5 billion down to $21.3. The individual taxpayer is carrying the burden of these increased expenditures and he is the very one who so badly needs tax relief.

Mr. Speaker, these facts demonstrate beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the last 3 years have been anything but economy years. Objective appraisal of the record shows that the economy pledge of 1952 has not been kept and will not be kept.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. Speaker, the size of the national debt is appalling. It is so huge as to defy comprehension. We are paying $7 billion a year just to carry it. But what is worse, it has consistently increased under the present administration despite repeated, categorial promises to the contrary in the campaign of 1952. These administration pledges have been broken. And they cannot possibly be redeeemed in the few remaining months of the administration. In a speech at Providence, R. I., in October 1952, President Eisenhower said:

Our children deserve a little better of us than to keep hanging bigger and better debts about their necks.

The following facts conclusively show that bigger debts have been piled upon the American people during the present administration.

The public debt during 3 fiscal years of this administration

[In billions]

	Beginning of year
Fiscal 1954 (July 1953)	$266.1
Fiscal 1955 (July 1954)	271.3
Fiscal 1956 (July 1955)	274.4
Fiscal 1957 (July 1956)	272.7
Increase during 3 full fiscal years	+6.6

CONTRAST WITH PREVIOUS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Speaker, the $6.6 billion increase is in sharp contrast to the record of the previous administration under similar peacetime conditions. During 4 full peace years—that is, fiscal years in which there was no war operation—under the previous administration, the debt was reduced by $12 billions, as follows:

	Billions
June 1946	$269.4
June 1950	257.4
4-year decrease under previous administration	−12.0

Mr. Speaker, there is no real tangible hope for improvement—tax relief and debt reduction—under present administration policies because Government expenditures are increasing, not decreasing, as I shall point out in more particulars in a few moments.

The administration, 2 years running, asked that the old debt ceiling of $275 billion be raised to $281 billion. Again this year, the request was renewed, this time for $278 billion. I wonder how many people realize that in December 1955, the debt reached its highest point in history—the stupendous sum of $280.8 billions—and that this, in a year of peace, was $1.6 billion above the peak reached during World War II, the greatest war in all history?

Mr. Speaker, present expenditure trends of the administration arrestingly indicate that this limit may have to go on indefinitely. Certainly under those circumstances it would have to if long-needed tax relief is ever granted.

APPROPRIATION RECORD OF THE LAST 4 YEARS

Mr. Speaker, when the present administration took office President Truman had just submitted his budget for fiscal 1954. The war in Korea was still on and no one knew when it would be concluded. The present administration immediately began to revise that budget and send new recommendations to the 83d Congress. And they really revised it—downward, that is, to the tune of $12,029,351,862 during the first session. That was the dramatic big splash—the new broom sweeping clean. It amounted to almost a 20 percent cut below the budget of President Truman which was a wartime budget, not a peacetime budget. This is the budget the present administration delights in looking back to and continually deprecating. I want to come back to that in a moment, but first on the big first year cut of $12 billion plus. What items were cut? Over $8 billion was in the Department of Defense and about $5 billion of that was against the Air Force. Fiscal salvation was on the way, so it may have seemed. A $12 billion cut is truly an impressive sum—but of course two-thirds of it was against national security items.

The 2d session of the 83d Congress received estimates of $50,253,323,985, about $4.3 billion less than appropriations in the 1st session. Appropriations enacted by the 2d session of the 83d Congress totaled $47,642,131,205, a further reduction of $2,611,192,780 of which $1.4 billion was against Defense. Meanwhile, expenditures for nondefense items continued to increase.

Now, Mr. Speaker, comes the reversal—another big splash, but this time in the other direction. Estimates submitted to the 1st session of the 84th Congress totaled $55,200,833,729—that's $7.5 billion above prior year appropriations. The Congress cut these requests by $2,076,012,514. What about the present or 2d session of the 84th Congress? Appropriation estimates received from the President come to a net figure of $61,143,478,538, or $8 billion above 1st session appropriations. And, Mr. Speaker, this does not reveal the whole story. When the final tabulations are made some weeks hence, I am certain they will show total obligation authorizations in all forms such as to fully justify the conclusion that no real administration economy-program exists.

The following tabulation substantiates the foregoing statements:

Estimates, appropriations, and reductions—last 4 years

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned, the administration takes great delight in comparing present budgets with the last budget submitted by President Truman. Admittedly, that budget could have been cut just as any budget can be cut. But they never overlook an opportunity to make comparisons with it—favorable to themselves and of course unfavorable to the previous administration. The import of these comparisons is that succeding budgets have deleted from the 1954 budget the expenditures and items so severely called into question during the 1952 campaign—meaning, of course, the several nondefense departments and agencies. So I recently compared the new obligation authority—authority to contract and spend—requested by President Truman in the last budget to which such frequent comparison is made and President Eisenhower's budget of this past January on which we have now concluded action. The statistics follow, taken from table V, page A9, Budget for 1954, and table on page M–20, Budget for 1957:

New obligation authority requested for other than defense military functions and foreign aid—budgets for fiscal years 1954 and 1957

One thing stands out. Of the 16 departments or groups on this table, all but 3 show that President Eisenhower requested more spending authority for 1957 than President Truman did for 1954. And in total, the 1957 request exceeded—I repeat, exceeded—the 1954 request by $3,720,000,000. When final tabulations are available, the difference will doubtless be much greater.

In the face of these facts—and every figure cited is documented—who, Mr. Speaker, can demonstrate that the present administration has kept, or shown any signs of trying to keep, its economy pledges?

Thirtieth Anniversary of Network Broadcasting by National Broadcasting Co.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. IRVING M. IVES
OF NEW YORK
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, we are approaching the 30th anniversary of network broadcasting by the National Broadcasting Co. The existence of network broadcasting has had a profound impact on our national culture. I should like to mark this occasion by having printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement. I ask unanimous consent to have the statement so printed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On Monday, November 15, 1926, the National Broadcasting Co. had its inaugural network program, linking, for the first time, 21 charter affiliated radio stations and 4 specially added outlets in cities all over the United States in a presentation of music, singing, and addresses. In that initial program there was set a standard which was designed to, and consistently has adhered to, the principle that only the finest is good enough for the American family. Among the well-remembered names of that first broadcast are those of the beloved Will Rogers, Walter Damrosch, the New York Symphony Orchestra, Mary Garden, the New York Oratorio Society, Edwin Franko Goldman, and many more.

Most important of all, it is well to remember that just 24 hours before this highly significant date, and within the life span of every one present in this Chamber, our great cities still were, in a manner of speaking, island communities. We were, in effect as far removed from each other as our inclination to travel the miles between.

Overnight, the inventive and organizational genius of men like Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff and the men who served with him, made the entire Nation next-door neighbors. In the simple flick of a switch, the amazing world of electronic science was to change the lives of an entire Nation. Mass communication, a notion we dreamed of with Jules Verne and H. G. Wells, was now a bewildering fact.

To comprehend the grandeur of a way of life which we accept without emotion, let us be reminded that it was a far different means of mass communiction which gave birth to America, one night 180 years ago when three citizens of our sister commonwealth, Massachusetts, rode through the night on horseback, to warn a few farmers in a few villages, that freedom was in danger.

Today, in microscopic segments of a second, 160 million Americans in 10,000 cities, towns and villages can be told what horse is winning the Kentucky Derby; can see and hear an atomic bomb bursting and can listen to pauper, prince or president at the very moment the events take place.

None of this was possible a comparatively few years ago.

Before and during World War I, the United States was almost entirely dependent upon foreign-owned cables and wireless facilities for contact with the rest of the world. Great Britain was the communication center of the world.

Suggestions from our own Navy Department inspired the formation of an American institution, which in December of 1919 became the Radio Corporation of America—parent of the National Broadcasting Company.

The early development stages of what was to come brought about the exciting occasions when individual radio stations transmitted spoken words and music—instead of the heretofore mystical dots and dashes of the telegraphic era.

Having once achieved reproduction of human sound, the engineering geniuses who brought the National Broadcasting Co. into being were not content until they could bring their achievements to the greater number for the greater good.

There were timorous tests and trials by which cities like New York, Boston, and Schenectady were joined in common communication.

Finally the momentous November night when music was for the millions.

As we look back even so short a span as 30 years, it is difficult to try to conceive life when there was no radio or television.

Eighty-fourth Congress Record in Behalf of Agriculture

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD D. COOLEY
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, 821 bills were referred to our Committee on Agriculture in the 84th Congress, to set a new record. In fact, the number of bills dealing with Agriculture was almost twice the previous record of 423 introduced in the previous Congress.

Our committee, with its 19 subcommittees, held 289 hearings.

We reported 113 bills.

We disposed of virtually all of the 821 bills referred to us, approving the best, consolidating the good points of others, and rejecting or passing over others. Among those not reported were a number of good bills that require further study before the Congress can act upon them.

Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Agriculture of the 84th Congress has handled the greatest legislative workload ever undertaken in any Congress, in a dedicated and devoted effort to bring to our farm people a fair share of the Nation's prosperity that rightly should be theirs. Although a Presidential veto defeated our major efforts to raise farm prices, the accomplishments of this Congress are such that each Member who has joined in the battles for our farmers may justly feel proud.

This Congress has made a magnificent record, but the welfare and prosperity of our farm families are a constant challenge. Much yet must be done. I hope in the months ahead, in direct association with farmers in their own fields, in their homes, in the country stores, at the county fairs, all of us may receive a new guidance and inspiration from them, to continue their battles in the 85th Congress when it convenes in January.

Mr. Speaker, while for each of the 11 years—1942–52 inclusive—our farmers had received average prices at 100 percent of parity or better, by the beginning of 1955, when this Congress convened, these prices had fallen far below a full parity relationship with the rest of the economy and farm income continued in a downward and devastating spiral. The average of farm prices had dropped 22 percent below the level of February 1951. Net farm income in 1954 had dipped about 30 percent under the income of 1947. The parity ratio was at the lowest level since 1941. Farm operating costs remained near record highs, and farm debt was increasing. Farmers' purchasing power had declined to the lowest level since 1940.

Our Committee on Agriculture, which it is my honor and privilege to serve as chairman, immediately set to work, in January 1955, to stem this new recession in agriculture, with the firm and resolute purpose of putting our farmers and their families again on the road toward income parity with our nonfarm population.

The most apparent and the most effective action open to this Congress, for quick relief of the farm distress, was to undo the damage of the Agricultural Act of 1954 which required that flexible—lower—price supports should be applied to the major crops.

This Congress approved H. R. 12, calling for an end to the downward flexing of prices; but we were thwarted and defeated by a Presidential veto. The will of the Congress did not prevail, as the President exercised his constitutional powers to reject H. R. 12. This will mean a loss of many millions of dollars to our farm families this year and it is my judgment that the veto has delayed a recovery of the farm economy.

Mr. Speaker, our fight was not in vain. Notwithstanding the veto, the Members should feel great pride in the record of this Congress in its accomplishments for agriculture. Our fight for 90 percent of parity forced Mr. Ezra Taft Benson, the Secretary of Agriculture, to raise the low prices he had set for the 1956 crops. As example, the Secretary had announced the support for wheat at $1.81 a bushel—76 percent of parity. This price was raised to $2 a bushel, or 84 percent of parity. The corn support was increased from $1.40 a bushel to $1.50, rice from $4.04 per hundredweight, to $4.50. The dairy supports were increased. Supports for oats, rye, barley, and grain sorghum were lifted from 70 to 76 percent of parity. I believe our effort also brought about better supports for cotton and peanuts than Mr. Benson otherwise would have proclaimed.

This record of the 84th Congress bespeaks a deep interest in the people who till the soil.

The Congress established a $1,200,000,000 soil bank.

It enacted various legislation to protect the interests of small farmers and the rights of tenants and sharecroppers.

It improved the agricultural credit system, with special emphasis on the well-being of family-operated farms.

It improved the machinery for disposal of our farm products abroad.

It opened wider the doors of our warehouses to provide food for needy people in our own country.

It advanced research in agriculture.

It enacted legislation and appropriations to expand and improve rural electrical and telephone service.

It expanded the program to provide milk for millions of schoolchildren.

It improved and extended the Sugar Act, in a way to give our own cane and beet producers a larger share of the American sugar market.

It made great advances for the improvement and conservation of our soil and water resources.

It authorized the greatest appropriation of funds of any Congress in our history for agriculture.

It repealed the Federal tax on gasoline used in farming.

Mr. Speaker, through all our efforts you will find one purpose overshadowing all others—that is: To perpetuate and strengthen the family farm and the rural community economic and social order that is indispensable as a source of spiritual, social, and political vitality in our growing Nation.

And, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my colleagues here, and the farmers and, indeed, all the American people, that the fight for fair treatment of our farm families will go on. Of necessity, it must go on. The interests of all our citizens requires that this fight continue.

Following is a review of some of the important enactments of the 84th Congress relating to agriculture:

THE AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1956—PUBLIC LAW 540

1. SOIL BANK

This act sets up a $1,200,000,000-a-year soil bank, in two parts:

(a) Acreage reserve: This program is designed to reduce acreages of wheat, cotton, corn, peanuts, rice, and tobacco. Payments to farmers are made to reduce their acreages of these crops below their acreage allotments, and these payments may be made as soon as the acreage is measured. Under this authority, the Department of Agriculture has set up 1956 rates of payment per acre, on a national average, as follows: Corn, $40.05; cotton, $45; wheat, $19.80; rice, $59.22; peanuts, $27; flue-cured tobacco, $255.42; and burley tobacco, $295.74. A maximum of $750 million a year could be expended on the acreage reserve for the next 4 years.

(b) Conservation reserve: This program is designed to remove acreage from crop production on a semipermanent basis, for which payments approximately equivalent to the rental value of the land would be made, with an annual national limit of $450 million.

Compulsory features, proposed in other soil-bank legislation, were not included in H. R. 12—vetoed—or in H. R. 10875 which became Public Law 540. Limit is placed on the amounts that can be spent on specific crops, thus assuring an equitable distribution of funds. Provision is made for the protection of tenants and sharecroppers. Procedures are provided for appeal by producers whose soil-bank contracts have been canceled because of alleged violations.

The act directs that the soil bank be commenced with 1956 crops, with a clear congressional intent that the fact that some crops had been planted at the time of enactment is not to stand in the way of starting the program this year.

Many Members of Congress are disappointed with the manner in which this program is being administered. The Secretary has discriminated against those farmers who need the benefits of this program most: namely, those farmers whose crops have been ruined or damaged by drought or flood. It was the clear intent of the Congress to pay farmers who plowed up their crops on a basis of the average yield of the land, but the Secretary has adopted an "appraised" yield payment plan, knocking down the level of payment to take into account any weather or other natural damage to the crops on the land put into the acreage reserve. Thus, where the average yield base might mean a payment of $45 an acre in cotton the Secretary actually is paying as low as $6 under his improvised "appraised" yield. Similar trimming down of payments has occurred in wheat, corn, and other crops.

The major objective of the soil bank and other provisions of the act, relating to surplus disposal and to marketing quotas and acreage allotments, is the adjustment of production to market needs, reduction of the surpluses, conservation of soil and water, and the general improvement in farm income.

2. CORN

The act authorizes four different programs under which corn farmers may receive price supports in 1956, as follows:

(a) Producers in the commercial area who elect to comply with the acreage allotments previously announced by the Secretary—at the rate of approximately 43 million acres—are eligible for price supports at $1.50 per bushel—86.2 percent of parity—under that program, without putting land into the soil bank.

(b) For the operation of the soil bank the bill increases the corn acreage allotment for 1956 by 9 million acres to a total of 51 million acres. Corn producers in the commercial producing area may qualify for price supports at $1.50 per bushel—86.2 percent of parity—by planting within their allotment from the 51 million-acre base acreage, provided they put into the soil bank an amount of cropland equal to 15 percent of their base acreage of corn.

(c) Producers in the commercial corn area who do not comply with the regular acreage allotments previously announced nor with the base acreage setup for soil bank purposes will still be eligible for price supports, under the noncompliance program newly announced by the Secretary, at the rate of $1.25 per bushel—about 83 percent of the support level of compliance corn in the commercial area.

(d) Producers outside the commercial area will receive a support at 82½ percent of the level of the support for compliance corn in the commercial area—or about $1.24 a bushel.

(e) The Secretary is directed, not later than December 15, 1956, to conduct a referendum of producers in the commercial corn area to determine whether they favor the present acreage allotment and price support program or would prefer to do away with acreage allotments completely and then let the Secretary fix the corn price support at such a level as he determines "will assist producers in marketing corn in the normal channels of trade but not encourage the uneconomic production of corn." If two-thirds or more of producers voting approved the change, corn then would be removed from the list of basic crops for price support purposes, and the support level thenceforward would be at the discretion of the Secretary, as has been the case in the small feed grains and in other crops.

3. FEED GRAINS

The act sets the price support for the 1956 crop of grain sorghums, barley, rye, and oats at 76 percent of the parity price for each commodity as of May 1, 1956. Thus, the 1956 supports are: Barley, $1.02 per bushel; oats, 65 cents per bushel; rye, $1.27 per bushel, and grain sorghums, $1.97 per hundredweight. These higher level supports thus supersede the 70 percent supports announced by the Secretary, which were 93 cents for barley, 59 cents for oats, $1.16 for rye, and $1.80 for grain sorghums.

4. COTTON

(a) A freeze of 1957 and 1958 national acreage allotments at no less than the 1956 allotment; (b) a provision that no State acreage allotment can be cut in 1957 and 1958 by more than 1 percent; (c) a special 100,000-acre national reserve is created to add to the allotments of small farmers; and (d) the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to sell Government cotton for export at the price necessary to regain America's traditional world market at around 5 million bales annually.

A program has been put into effect to make cash payments on the export of cotton textiles and cotton waste, to equalize the competitive position of our own cotton textile mills with foreign mills in the use of American cotton.

The act requires that whenever the price of either cottonseed or soybeans is supported, the price of the other shall be supported at a level which will cause them to compete on equal terms in the market.

Solution of our market problems, particularly in cotton textiles, will be substantially assisted by authority clearly given the President in this act to negotiate voluntary agreements with representatives of other countries with respect to importations into the United States of competing agricultural commodities or products made therefrom.

5. RICE

The act provides that the State acreage allotments for rice for 1956 shall not be less than 85 percent of the final State allotment for 1955; and that the national acreage allotments of rice for 1957 and 1958 shall not be less than the final national allotment for 1956, and shall be apportioned among the States in the same manner as the 1956 final allotment. The act provides a certificate program for rice, at the discretion of the Secretary. The certificate program will not be substituted for the present program unless the Secretary determines and proclaims that the initiation of the problem is "administratively feasible and in the best interests of rice producers in the United States."

6. TRANSITIONAL PARITY

The act freezes transitional parity for the basic commodities for 1957. This will mean that the parity price of corn, wheat, and peanuts—the only 3 basic commodities currently affected by the transitional parity formula—will be 5 percent higher in 1957 than they otherwise would have been. The bill also requires the Secretary of Agriculture to make a thorough study of possible methods of improving the parity formula and to report to Congress thereon not later than January 31, and to include drafts of any legislation needed to carry out this recommendation.

7. GOVERNMENT-OWNED LANDS

The President is directed to restrict insofar as practicable the leasing of Government-owned lands for the production of price-supported crops in surplus supply.

8. SECTION 32 EXPANSION

Appropriation of an additional $500 million annually is authorized for section 32 funds, for use in surplus removal and disposal operations, particularly for perishable commodities. The section 32 program previously has operated on funds derived from an allocation of 30 percent of duties collected under the customs laws, amounting to approximately $200 million annually. The authorization of a $500-million appropriation, in addition to the amount available from a share of the customs collections, will bring to about $700 million annually the funds available for this program which acts as a substantial price stabilization mechanism for various crops, as well as serving the needs of the school lunch program, making food available for low-income persons and generally aiding in the disposal of surpluses.

9. FORESTRY

The act authorizes broad expansion of cooperative activity between the Federal Government and the States in reforestation. Upon presentation by the proper State official the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to approve a plan for tree planting within the State and thereafter to cooperate technically and financially in such program. With respect to parts of the program carried out on non-Federal lands, the Federal financial contribution cannot exceed that of the State toward the same program. The secretary is directed to cooperate with other Federal agencies and with the appropriate State forester in approving and carrying out such plans.

10. OTHER IMPORTANT PROVISIONS

The act embraces various improvements in the disposal of surplus commodities and other significant provisions.

To facilitate surplus disposal in the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to process food commodities, such as grain, into a form—meal or flour—which can be used in the home and is also given authority long sought by both the State and the Federal Government to devote food commodities to certain penal institutions.

To facilitate surplus disposal abroad, the President is given authority to pay ocean freight on surplus commodities donated for use in other countries and to step up disposal under title II of Public Law 480 from $300 million to $500 million.

The act authorizes the appointment of a Surplus Disposal Administrator in the Department of Agriculture.

Provision is made for the appointment of a commission to study and make recommendations to Congress on increased industrial use of agricultural products.

In addition to these specific new authorizations to deal with the surplus problem, the Secretary is directed to make a study of proposals for disposing food domestically through some kind of food-stamp plan; he is directed to report to Congress within 90 days on this important matter; he is directed to make a similar study and report on the matter of establishing strategic stockpiles of agricultural commodities both in the United States and abroad for use in the event of war or similar emergency; he is directed to use existing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose of surpluses generally and long-staple cotton specifically.

An attack is made upon the surplus problem affecting long staple cotton by again placing extra long staple cotton, now exempt from quotas, within the quota set up for all cotton longer than 1⅛ inches.

In order to encourage further the underplanting of acreage allotments, the act authorizes a producer, for the first time, to plant only a part or even none of an acreage allotment for 3 successive years without losing his history and the right to future allotments. This could eliminate the practice of planting merely to retain history for allotment purposes, which is now required.

To make present production adjustment laws more effective, the bill increases to 75 percent of the support price the penalty for exceeding peanut-marketing quotas.

GREAT PLAINS

H. R. 11833—on President's desk—the Great Plains Conservation bill—proposes a broad program, in cooperation with farmers, to restore and conserve cultivated and grazing lands of a wide area in the 10 Great Plains States that often are ravaged by high winds and dry weather. A $150 million program, over a 10-year period, is provided in the legislation. The bill rounds out and makes available a sounder and more workable approach to Federal cost-sharing in meeting the conservation problems on individual farms and ranches of the Great Plains. It would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate and announce a conservation program for that area and to enter into 10-year contracts with farm and ranch operators to terminate not later than December 31, 1971. The program differs from the soil bank program in that it is aimed at obtaining a shift in land use rather than a reduction in production. It is designed to encourage a permanent shift in land use in the Great Plains, taking into consideration the conditions which are peculiar to that area.

CONSERVATION

The Great Plains program was one of a series of major enactments for the conservation of soil and water resources, in addition to the soil bank law.

Public Law 756 extends for 2 years the Agricultural Conservation Program (ACP).

H. R. 8750—on President's desk—broadens the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act to include all aspects of the conservation, development, utilization, and disposal of water—not just the "agricultural phases" of these activities as provided in the present act. This means that such things as municipal and industrial water supplies may be included as part of a watershed program. The bill permits the building of dams with a capacity in excess of 5,000 acre-feet, up to 25,000 feet, if the capacity in excess of that figure is for purposes other than flood prevention and the construction cost of such excess capacity is borne entirely by the local cooperating organizations. It provides that the local organizations shall not be required to assume any part of the construction cost of structural measures applicable to flood prevention. Local organizations and individuals will continue to be required to provide rights-of-way, easements, etc., for such structural measures and to carry out necessary land-treatment measures. It eliminates delay in the handling of small projects by providing that only projects involving a Federal contribution of more than $250,000, or a structure of more than 2,500 acre-feet need be submitted separately to Congress through the President, but requires all projects submitted to Congress to be approved by the appropriate committees of the House and Senate. It provides for long-term loans at the Government rate of interest to local organizations for the purpose of financing their share of the cost of programs, and it extends the provisions of the act to Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The 45 day "waiting time" had already been reduced to 15 days in Public Law 734, and is eliminated altogether in H. R. 8750.

Public Law 483 provides that in establishing the national standards for the Agricultural Conservation Program, the Secretary of Agriculture will have the authority, if he chooses to exercise it, of applying water conservation measures as ACP practices in any State. This act struck out the words "in arid or semiarid sections" which previously had limited the area of operation of this program as it relates to water conservation measures.

Public Law 473 enacted into permanent legislation authority which has been contained in the most recent several appropriation acts for the Department of Agriculture and which has been exercised, pursuant to those acts, by the Forest Service. The act consists essentially of authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to advance Federal funds in the furtherance of cooperative research projects.

IMPROVED CREDIT

Congress took special note of the need for improved and expanded credit services, especially for family unit farms, in view of the current hard-pressed situation in agriculture.

H. R. 11544—on President's desk—(a) authorizes the refinancing of existing indebtedness of eligible farmers if the borrowers are "presently unable to meet the terms and conditions of their outstanding indebtedness and are unable to refinance such debts with commercial banks, cooperative lending agencies, or other responsible credit sources at rates and terms which they could reasonably be expected to fulfill"; the bill authorizes the Farmers Home Administration to accept a second mortgage for either direct or indirect loans for this purpose; (b) authorizes FHA to make loans, for the first time, to part-time farmers; loans authorized include those for real estate improvement and development and loans for operating expenses; to be eligible a borrower would have to be a bona fide farmer who historically depended on agriculture for his livelihood and who is conducting a substantial farming operation; such loans may also be made for refinancing of such a farm unit; (c) the bill extends from June 30, 1957, to June 30, 1959, the authority to make economic emergency loans under Public Law 727, 83d Congress, and increases from $15 million to $65 million the amount from the loan revolving fund which may be used for such loans; (d) increases from $7,000 to $10,000 the maximum amount of a loan for operating purposes, with the special provision that not more than 10 percent of the funds available in any 1 year may be used for loans up to $20,000; (e) authorizes the Secretary to extend up to 10 years the repayment period of regular operative loans to farmers in cases of special hardship; (f) a special provision for real estate loans up to $15,000 for the improvement or replacement of tenant houses on farms having not more than three families. Not included in the bill, because existing law contains the general authority, but in the House committee report is a statement of policy favoring the making of emergency replanting loans to orchardists whose orchards have been destroyed by natural disasters with a deferred repayment schedule geared to the time required to obtain a crop from the replanted trees.

H. R. 10285—On President's desk—increases farmer ownership and control of the farm credit system and promotes its efficiency and growth. The bill embraces a congressional policy to (a) provide agriculture with a sound, dependable source of credit; (b) combine the Federal intermediate credit banks and the production credit corporations in order to increase the efficiency of operation and facilitate the retirement of Government capital; (c) encourage and promote the continued growth and development of the production credit associations as self-supporting cooperative lending institutions operating on a sound credit basis with maximum local authority to determine credit needs and loan policies consistent with the maintenance of a national production credit system; and (d) continue to provide other financing institutions making loans to farmers and ranchers with the right to borrow from and rediscount with the combined entity on a basis comparable with the production credit associations.

SUGAR

Public Law 545 (H. R. 7030) reenacts and extends for 4 years, to December 31, 1960, the Sugar Act of 1948, as amended, with further amendments to, first, give domestic cane and sugar-beet producers a fair share of the growth of the United States sugar market; second, bring about a more equitable participation by foreign suppliers in this market; and third, maintain stability of sugar supplies and prices in the United States.

The Sugar Act is one of the most successful of our farm programs, in terms of benefits to producers and dependable supplies at stabilized prices for consumers. Sugar consumption continues to soar under this program. The United States now consumes over 8,500,000 tons of the approximately 40 million tons annual world production, and the consumption is increasing by more than 135,000 tons a year.

This is because the Sugar Act maintains a fair price to housewives, while giving a fair return to producers.

Public Law 545 provides that domestic producers may supply 55 percent of the growth in the American market, in addition to the approximately 4,500,000 tons annually already allotted to them.

This participation by the United States sugar producers in the future market growth restores to them the status they had under sugar-quota legislation prior to World War II. In the Sugar Act of 1948, quotas for the domestic areas were limited to fixed quantities, with all the growth of our market going to foreign suppliers, 96 percent to Cuba. This was done to assist Cuba in making the transition from wartime to peacetime conditions, since Cuba's production has been greatly expanded to meet America's wartime needs. However, it was recognized at the time that the change was of temporary nature and that at the appropriate time the domestic areas should resume participation in market growth.

Cuba, under Public Law 545, retains its status as our largest foreign supplier. The actual tonnage which Cuba will market in the United States is expected to increase from year to year because of her participation in our market growth. Additional quotas granted to other foreign suppliers, as provided in this act, are in line with our national policy of broadening our trade relations.

It should be emphasized here that the sugar program, supported by a small excise on sugar, actually has shown a profit of about $312 million since it became effective in 1937, and American housewives, under this program, pay less for sugar than is the case in many other areas of the world.

SCHOOL MILK PROGRAM

Public Law 465: This act, first, extended the special school milk program 2 years to June 30, 1958, increased the amount authorized for it from $50 million annually to $60 million annually for the current fiscal year and to $75 million for each of the next 2 fiscal years, and made certain nonprofit institutions devoted to the care of underprivileged children eligible for the benefits of the program; second, extended the accelerated brucellosis program 2 years to June 30, 1958, and increased the amount authorized for it from $15 million annually to $17 million for the current fiscal year and to $20 million for each of the next 2 fiscal years; and third, extended the veterans and Armed Forces milk program 2 years to December 31, 1958.

Public Law 752 makes the benefits of the school-milk program available to most summer camps, nursery schools, child-care centers, settlement houses, and similar institutions which are operated on a nonprofit basis, removing the previous qualification that limited this phase of the milk program to those nonprofit institutions serving underprivileged children on a special welfare or charitable basis.

PERISHABLE COMMODITIES

H. R. 5337—on President's desk—would, without broadening the scope or original intent of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act of 1930, as amended, correct certain deficiencies which have become apparent in the administration of the act, thereby lending greater strength and more effectiveness to the basic legislation. The bill would accomplish this end by (a) strengthening the provisions relating to misbranding or misrepresentation of grade and origin of fresh fruits and vegetables; (b) increasing the maximum annual license fee from the present $15 per year to $25; (c) permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to deny issuance of a license to any person convicted of a felony in any State or Federal court; (d) authorizing the Secretary to deny a license to any applicant who has been involved in bankruptcy proceedings within 3 years unless the applicant furnishes a bond or other assurance satisfactory to the Secretary; (e) empowering the Secretary to suspend the license of a person who employs in any responsible position an individual whose license is under suspension; and (f) providing authority for the inspection of any perishable commodity covered by the act.

TRADE DEVELOPMENT AND ASSISTANCE ACT

H. R. 11708 amends the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954—Public Law 480. This is the law which authorizes the sale of agricultural surpluses for foreign currencies, where such sales are in addition to the usual purchases of such commodity by the foreign country. H. R. 11708 increases from $1,500,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 the total amount of the foreign currency transactions which may be carried out under the law. It also authorizes broadening of the use of the foreign currencies in Public Law 480 operations to include assistance to American schools in countries where such currencies are available. The bill exempts sales of fruit and the products thereof under title I of Public Law 480 from the requirements of the cargo preference laws. It also broadens the provisions of title II of the act to permit donations of food to refugees and similar cases of extraordinary need.

TOBACCO

Public Law 425 adjusted the burley tobacco allotment for 1956 upward, to conform with acreage justified by accurate data on 1955 production which was not available when the original allotment for 1956 was determined. The effect of Public Law 425 was to make most farm allotments the same as they were in 1955.

Public Law 427, House Joint Resolution 521, readjusts the acreage allotment of Maryland tobacco to conform with acreage justified by data on production of the previous year not available when the original allotment for 1956 was determined. The effect of this act was to eliminate an acreage reduction of approximately 15 percent for 1956.

Public Law 426, House Joint Resolution 518, adjusts upward the acreage allotments of fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco to conform with acreage justified by data on production of the previous year which was not available when the original allotments for 1956 were determined.

Public Law 609, H. R. 9475: This act changed the statutory deadline from December 1 to the following February 1, for the announcement by the Secretary of Agriculture of tobacco marketing quotas with respect to all kinds of tobacco except flue-cured. The law had required that the Secretary make the announcement of tobacco marketing quotas not later than December 1 of the year preceding the year for which such quotas are established. On December 1 most kinds of tobacco have not yet been marketed. Therefore, instead of the accurate measurement of the quantity of tobacco produced during the current year which the Secretary possesses as soon as the current crop has passed through the markets, he has on December 1 only the estimates made as of November 1. In a number of recent years these estimates have varied sufficiently from actual outturn of crops to have created a situation where the marketing quota announced by the Secretary was substantially different from the quota he would have determined had the actual weight of the crop been known to him. Under Public Law 609, the Secretary now may make the quota announcements at any time prior to February 1 and it is presumed that he will do so with respect to the various types of tobacco at such time as sufficient production and other data are available.

Prior to this enactment, this Congress had approved separate bills to adjust allotments to conform to data that was not available when the allotments were announced—a condition that may be avoided in the future by the use of the authority in Public Law 609.

The Congress, by unanimous votes of the House and Senate, approved House Joint Resolution 317 designating November 16–22 this year as National Farm-City Week, with the purpose of promoting better understanding between farm and city people. The resolution requests the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the Department of Agriculture, the Land-Grant Colleges, the Agricultural Extension Service and all other appropriate agencies and officials of Government, to cooperate with farm organizations and other groups in programs observing this Farm-City Week, including plans for public meetings, discussion, exhibits, pageants and press, radio and television features.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR AGRICULTURE

Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress, in its two sessions, has approved appropriations and loan authorizations aggregating $3,908,818,000 for the Department of Agriculture, exclusive of the actions restoring the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The previous Congress authorized $2,778,400,000 for the Department.

Liberal appropriations and authorizations were approved for conservation, education, research, school lunch, and all the various action programs.

A compilation of the House Committee on Appropriations figures shows specific appropriations and authorizations of the 84th Congress and the comparative figures for the previous Congress as follows: Research, 84th, $179,044,000; 83d, $129,600,000. REA electric and telephone facilities, 84th, $549 million; 83d, $420 million. Farmers Home Administration loan authorizations, 84th, $367,500,000; 83d, $330 million. Extension Service, 84th, $101,175,000; 83d, $78,800,000. Soil Conservation Service and watershed and flood prevention, 84th, $182,268,000; 83d, $145,011,000. School lunch, 84th, $183,235,000; 83d, $166,601,000.

OTHER ENACTMENTS

Public Law 431: This act made possible the planting in 1956 of an expanded acreage of durum wheat in counties known to be capable of producing this wheat, in order to alleviate the serious shortage of this particular type of wheat, which is preferred in the manufacture of macaroni.

Public Law 607 first, increased by 15,000 acres the lands within the roadless area of the Superior National Forest which may be acquired under the act of June 22, 1948; second, increased to $2,500,000 (from $500,000) the amount authorized to be appropriated for the acquisition of lands under such act; and third, made section 5 of such act applicable to the additional lands described by the bill of June 30. Section 5 provides for payment to the State of Minnesota of amounts based on the appraised value of national-forest lands in the roadless area rather than forest receipts, as provided by title 16, United States Code, section 500.

Bills approved by the Congress and awaiting the action of the President include:

S. 1400, to protect the integrity of grade certificates under the United States Grain Standards Act.

S. 1915, to provide for the exchange of employees of the United States Department of Agriculture and employees of State political subdivisions or educational institutions.

S. 2216, relating to occupancy of national forest lands.

S. 3032, granting the consent and approval of Congress to the Middle Atlantic Interstate Forest Fire Protection Compact.

H. R. 11682, Department of Agriculture Organic Act, providing primarily for permanent authorizing legislation for many activities heretofore authorized by appropriation acts.

Several other measures of local interest were handled by our committee which have become law or which are awaiting action by the President.

Mr. Speaker, the recession in agriculture is reflected particularly in the volume of inquiries coming to Members of Congress and the House Committee on Agriculture, concerning farm legislation. I hope the foregoing summary of important actions in the 2d session of the 84th Congress will assist in furnishing factual information about our work. Those who may be interested in reviewing all the farm major legislation passed during this Congress should refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 10, part 10, pages 13267–13270, of August 25, 1955, where I presented a summary of enactments relating to agriculture during the first session of this Congress.

Swiss Watch Imports

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, on May 24, 1956, I introduced H. R. 11437, a bill to impose a tax on the processing of certain watch movements. This bill was introduced at the urgent request of the Department of the Treasury because of a rapidly developing problem with regard to the importation of Swiss watches. It has become apparent that, under the provisions of the existing tariff law, there are opportunities by which foreign producers can avoid the clear intent of Congress with regard to the protection of the domestic watch industry.

The Committee on Ways and Means considered this problem in the last session of this Congress and, after full public hearings, reported a bill favorably to the House designed to close this loophole in the tariff structure. No action was taken by the House last session on this bill. As I have indicated, the matter was again brought to our attention in this session, and I responded by the introduction of the bill in question. I believe that it is highly regrettable that the Committee on Ways and Means has failed completely to consider this pressing problem. It is now obvious that no action will be taken prior to adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it absolutely clear that in the next session of the Congress I shall press for early consideration of this matter by the Committee on Ways and Means. Our national security requires that the matter be no longer delayed.

I include at this point a letter, dated July 27, 1956, from the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and another letter, under the same date, from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to myself.

JULY 27, 1956.

Hon. JERE COOPER,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing in reference to H. R. 11436 and H. R. 11437, identical bills imposing a processing tax on certain watch movements which were introduced by Mr. MILLS and Mr. REED, respectively, at the second session of the 84th Congress, and referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The purpose of this legislation, which is supported by the Treasury Department and other interested agencies in the executive branch, is to correct a recently developed deficiency in the provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 relating to watch movements.

We understand that you and a number of other members of your committee felt that adequate consideration of the bills would require public hearings and extensive consideration by the committee.

As you know, the Treasury Department and other interested executive agencies believe this deficiency which presently exists in the tariff law is a quite serious one and can be satisfactorily corrected only through legislation.

Now that Congress is about to adjourn, it will, of course, not be possible for this matter to be rectified before next year. However, we plan to propose legislation early in the next session of Congress when there will be ample time to give it thorough consideration. I hope that this can take place as shortly after the Congress convenes as you find it practicable.

Sincerely yours,

G. M. HUMPHREY,
Secretary of the Treasury.

JULY 27, 1956.

Hon. DANIEL A. REED,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. REED: Because of your very real interest and help in the introduction of the bills imposing a processing tax on certain watch movements and designed to avoid and correct a recently developed deficiency in the provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 relating to watch movements, I am sending you a copy of a letter which the Secretary of the Treasury has sent today to Chairman COOPER.

There is no question but what in the tremendous press of business in the closing weeks of this session it is apparently not feasible for public hearings which have been thought by the Ways and Means Committee to be necessary to be held.

At the same time, as Secretary Humphrey points out to Chairman COOPER, the Treasury feels very deeply about the innate fairness and necessity of this legislation and thinks it only fair to give public notice that we will renew our request for consideration of the legislation at the earliest possible moment after the new Congress convenes in January.

Again, the very real thanks of the Treasury Department for your help and consideration in this entire matter.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID W. KENDALL,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

This Is the Real America

OF
HON. ROBERT S. KERR
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "This Is the Real America," written by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and published in the Family Weekly magazine for July 1, 1956. It deals with the elements which make America great.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIS IS THE REAL AMERICA

(By HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, United States Senator from Minnesota)

What is America? Ask a hundred Americans, and you will receive a hundred answers. Admittedly, we live in a land of vast resources and mass-production skills. Yet, they who think we are just a combination of skyscrapers, shiny automobiles, television sets, and mechanized kitchens miss the real America.

America is not just efficiency and bigness. America is people—people of many walks of life, prizing varied achievements, but sharing a common regard for the dignity of each other and inspired by infinite hope.

America is a people at work, producing coal and steel, building houses and highways, selling goods and services.

America is more an array of small-town Main Streets than it is glittering Broadways.

America, deep underneath, is the stability and character and willingness to work exemplified by the men and women on hundreds of thousands of American family farms. It is the tradition of family living, church on Sunday, the family picnic, the respect for hard work. It is this that runs through the whole fabric of American life, whether small town or big city.

America is people working together in a thousand voluntary organizations—planning parks, building clean playgrounds and beaches, organizing scouting groups, improving neighborhoods and towns and cities, raising funds for medical research. It is men and women in laboratories and in sickrooms and hospital operating rooms, fighting the daily struggle against pain and fear and death.

America is opportunity, where a man's station in life is what he makes it and not what his birth might indicate. America is where men and women can openly join in organized labor to protect their livelihood and their health and their families; it is where other men and women risk their fortunes and devote their energies and dedication to keeping American industry progressive and dynamic, so that our economy may continue to expand.

America is the excitement of youth, heedless of the cynic and the pessimist, an impatience for fulfillment of even greater promise for each generation.

America is the exemplification of mass acceptance of each individual's human dignity as an inherent right; America is the conscience that pushes us and those with whom we associate in the world toward greater justice for all men, no matter what their creed or color. It is the compassion that sends our hand out to the aged and the sick, to the homeless and the starving, at home and around the world.

America is abhorrence of war and violence and oppression in any form—yet a zeal to uphold moral rights and human freedoms so strong we are willing to fight to preserve them, whatever the personal sacrifice.

America is strength and power from spiritual and moral principles upon which our Nation was founded, with our strength ebbing and flowing as we cling to or neglect those spiritual and moral principles.

It is this indomitable spirit of America that I believe in—the real America. It is to maintain this kind of an America, based upon justice for all, compassion for all, tolerance for all, and respect for all, whether we agree or disagree with their views; it is to this vision of America which I hold dear in my heart that I have dedicated my life and whatever talents God may have given me.

TVA Power System

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ALBERT GORE

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two letters and a statement concerning the TVA power system, the latter being an analysis of Senate bill 3964 and its effects on the TVA power system, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the correspondence and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY,
Knoxville, Tenn., July 20, 1956.

The Honorable ALBERT GORE,
The United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: Your letter of July 11, 1956, refers to the fact that TVA has not yet submitted a report to the Senate Public Works Committee on S. 3964, a bill introduced by Senator MARTIN of Pennsylvania, and requests that I advise you of the views of the TVA Board of Directors or of a majority of the Board.

We regret the delay in submitting a formal report on S. 3964 to the Senate Public Works Committee which has resulted from efforts to reconcile differences of opinion within the Board. We expect within the next few days, however, to transmit a report to the Bureau of the Budget for clearance.

In the meantime, responding to your request, there is enclosed a statement which summarizes my views on S. 3964. I have discussed this statement with the other members of the Board and am authorized by Dr. Curtis to say that he agrees with it. General Vogel wishes me to advise you that it does not reflect his position.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND R. PATY,
Director.

JULY 26, 1956.

Dr. RAYMOND R. PATY,
Director, Tennessee Valley Authority,
Knoxville, Tenn.

DEAR DR. PATY: I thank you for your letter of July 20 and for your analysis of Senate bill 3964, which analysis, I understand from your letter, is concurred in by your fellow Board member, Dr. Harry A. Curtis.

This analysis of S. 3964 by a majority of the TVA Board of Directors confirms my own prior analysis of the bill as being unworkable and antagonistic to the TVA.

It is my view that the Senate Public Works Committee will not favorably report this bill or report one even similar in objective and effect. Enactment of Senate bill 3964 would be very damaging to TVA.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT GORE.

ANALYSIS OF S. 3964 AND ITS EFFECTS ON THE TVA POWER SYSTEM

S. 3964 would authorize TVA to issue bonds for the purpose of financing additions to its power system. However, the authorization would be subject to such limitations and surrounded by such restrictions that the bill could not provide a basis for successful financing and operation of the system.

The principal features of the bill and resultant problems which it would raise are as follows:

1. The bill provides for issuance of bonds up to a total of $200 million outstanding at any one time. This amount is sufficient to finance only about a million kilowatts of generation and transmission capacity. The normal load growth on the TVA system, exclusive of the growth in Federal loads, will be on the order of 150,000 kilowatts a year. The authorization for $200 million of bonds would thus take care of less than 2 years' load growth, and would provide no assurance to the power consumers of the Tennessee Valley area that their long-term requirements for additional power capacity could be met.

2. The authorization for the limited amount of bonds provided under the bill would be accompanied by imposition of extraordinary and unwarranted financial burdens. Specifically, S. 3964 would require that TVA pay a return on the appropriation investment in TVA's power facilities equal to the computed average interest rate payable by the Treasury on its outstanding marketable public obligations, while at the same time leaving in effect the existing requirement contained in title II of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act 1948, that TVA repay this appropriation investment over a 40-year period. The double requirement of a return on the Treasury's investment and a repayment of that investment would have a number of effects:

(a) It would drain off so much of TVA's net power revenues and leave so little coverage for debt service on revenue bonds as to make infeasible the issuance of such bonds on a reasonable basis. As a result, unduly high interest costs would be incurred and the net income to the Government as owner of the business would be reduced.

(b) It would render impossible the use of any substantial portion of TVA's earnings to supplement bond proceeds as a means of financing additions to the system.

(c) This in turn would insure that the $200-million bond ceiling provided under the bill would be reached very quickly.

(d) The Government, as owner of the system, would be withdrawing its equity investment in the business during periods when it was necessary to sell bonds to private investors to finance system expansion. This would represent basically unsound financing, which in the case of a private utility would not be permitted.

3. Under the bill, bonds and revenues, even in the limited amounts authorized or available, could not be used until after affirmative approval by Congress in acting on a budget request. The bill specifically provides in this regard that no bonds shall be sold nor bond proceeds used except for purposes "approved by the Congress in connection with its consideration of the Corporation's budget programs transmitted by the President pursuant to the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended." The bill would leave in effect the third paragraph of title II of the 1948 Appropriation Act, which prohibits TVA's use of power revenues for construction of new power-producing projects (except for replacement purposes) unless and until approved by act of Congress. And it would extend this prohibition to include power-producing units and installations, as well as projects, thus making it applicable to additional units at existing plants.

Congress has recognized from the beginning that TVA was engaged in business-type operations which could not be conducted successfully without confiding to management the responsibility for decisions on business matters. Congressional control has been exercised by prescribing the policies which TVA shall follow and by holding the management of TVA responsible for the results of the decisions made in carrying out those policies. In accordance with this pattern, TVA has been accorded a wide discretion to use the proceeds of its power business in carrying on that business under the policies laid down by Congress. Under the provisions of S. 3964, however, issuance of any of the $200 million of bonds permitted under the bill to finance a proposed addition to the TVA power system would be dependent on the same budgetary and congressional approval process which would apply in the case of an appropriation; and the same process would also become applicable with respect to a proposed use of revenues to initiate construction of additional generating units at existing plants. The requirement of express congressional approval would place the initial point of decision on TVA bond issues and the use of TVA revenues for new construction in the Bureau of the Budget, through which the TVA budget is submitted to the Congress. If TVA's recommendations were disapproved by the Bureau, they would not come to the attention of Congress unless Congress should ask for them.

The result of adoption of the proposal in S. 3964 to require express congressional approval of the use of bond and revenue proceeds for new construction would be to deprive TVA, when it was obtaining funds for construction primarily from such sources, of even the measure of financial flexibility which Congress has considered desirable for TVA while it was obtaining such funds primarily from appropriations. The region TVA serves could have no assurance that its power needs would be met under such a situation.

4. S. 3964 does not authorize use of bond proceeds in connection with the lease, lease-purchase or contracts for the power output of a power facility financed by State or local interests. The cost of a lease would be an operating expense payable solely out of revenues received from electric consumers in the valley. In the case of lease-purchase, the costs would not only be paid by the consumers of the valley, but the title would eventually rest in the Federal Government. It would seem to be sound policy to provide for the possible participation of State and local interests in raising the capital required for TVA power expansion if they are ready and able to do so and if the circumstances make it necessary or advisable to raise capital in this way.

5. S. 3964 makes issuance of bonds by TVA subject to sections 302 and 303 of the Government Corporation Control Act. These sections would give the Secretary of the Treasury complete authority over issuance of TVA bonds, and over deposit and investment of TVA bond proceeds and other funds. The Secretary would become, in effect, the final judge as to all details of TVA financing. While his advice might be helpful, control should not rest with him since he carries no responsibility for the success or failure of TVA operations. Moreover, revenue bonds such as TVA would issue, unlike obligations of the Treasury, are issued pursuant to and incorporate by reference long and complicated bond contracts, which contain many covenants affecting the business operations of the borrower. Power in the Secretary of the Treasury to approve or veto the contents of TVA bonds would thus deprive the TVA Board of control over decisions affecting TVA's actual administration. Such Treasury control is inappropriate in the case of revenue bonds because they are not issued on the credit of the United States and would have no impact on Treasury operations. The Treasury does not now exercise such control with respect to bonds issued solely on the basis of the revenues of the issuing agency.

6. S. 3964 contains a provision prohibiting extension of the TVA power service area beyond the boundaries existing on May 1, 1956, or supplying of power by TVA to purchasers outside such area except pursuant to authority hereafter granted by law. The TVA power service area has undergone only a few minor changes since 1945. TVA has no desire to expand this area and has on numerous occasions declined applications for service outside the area. However, the question of fringe adjustments along the border of existing areas will almost inevitably arise from time to time. For example, cases have occurred, and are likely to occur in the future, where an electric cooperative to which TVA supplies power wishes to adjust its service area by exchanging facilities and customers with an adjoining distribution agency, public or private. Again, TVA may be asked to serve a cooperative or small community located outside the limits of TVA's present service area but in the shadow of one of TVA's dams or of a Corps of Engineers dam on the Cumberland River, the output of which is marketed through the TVA system. Under S. 3964, TVA would be prohibited from supplying such a cooperative or community until legislative approval was first obtained.

7. Under S. 3964, TVA bond and power proceeds would be subject to apportionment under the provisions of R. S. 3679. Under the apportionment procedure the Bureau of the Budget could schedule TVA expenditures by months, quarters, operating periods, or other time periods as it saw fit. The primary purpose of the apportionment procedure is to prevent anticipation of appropriations. As applied to funds derived from revenues or the sale of revenue bonds it does not serve this purpose at all, but only transfers to another agency final authority over the amounts and rates of expenditure of funds which have already been raised by borrowing or are derived from revenues.

8. Under S. 3964, the proceeds of bonds issued by TVA would be included in the computations of budget receipts, expenditures, surpluses, or deficits, except for amounts budgeted for payment by TVA to the Treasury. The result would be to treat the borrowings on revenue bonds as though they added to budget deficits or diminished budget surpluses, although this would not be the case since the Treasury would have no obligation to pay the principal of or interest on the bonds.

Man of the Year in the South

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES C. DAVIS
OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, each year the editors of Dixie Business Magazine conduct a poll to elect the "Man of the Year" in the South. This was begun in 1946 and has continued since that time. Recipients of this award represent a cross section of the highest type leadership in the South from many varied fields including industry, business, law and the clergy.

It is fitting and proper that the official ballot for 1956 should include the name of the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, Senator GEORGE.

Senator GEORGE was elected to the United States Senate in 1922. During the course of the 34 years in which he has served in that great deliberative body he has received many honors both in and out of the Senate. He has served as chairman of 2 of the most responsible committees in the Senate, the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Now in the twilight of his long and distinguished senatorial career he has been named to the "South's Hall of Fame for the Living" by the editors of Dixie Business Magazine. Limited to 200 living men and women, the "South's Hall of Fame for the Living" is an institution which recognizes eminent southerners for achievement in their chosen field. It gives well-deserved recognition to those men and women whose outstanding contributions to their profession, to their community and to the South has left its indelible mark.

Senator GEORGE is a worthy addition to this group. He succeeds the late Honorable Alben Barkley to this honored position and joins that group of men whose deeds posterity will measure to determine the success or failure of this generation. His demonstrated ability and his recognized professional and personal integrity merits this recognition.

Need for Support of the Partridge Schools for the Mentally Retarded

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on a number of occasions, most recently on May 7, I have pointed out the vital challenge facing our country in meeting the needs of the mentally retarded. The group numbers some 4¾ million Americans.

There is no group among them more deservant of our interest than the 1½ million youngsters who are mentally retarded.

Each of these children is precious to us.

Each child's whole life stretches before it. It is a life which can be an agony of despair and futility and neglect or a life in which the child can achieve as much of his or her birthright as is humanly possible.

Here, then, is a vast group of children with a problem—or whole series of problems—which challenge the science, the humanity, the devotion of all of the rest of our Nation.

Here is a group of children whom we can, by apathy, simply leave on the "scrap heap" of society—neglected, forgotten, untended, or whom by constructive work, we can help develop to the limit of their potentialities as fine, useful citizens.

MIRACLES IN PIONEERING

Fortunately, a number of outstanding individuals and groups in our country have achieved what almost seem to be miracles in pioneering in new methods, in helping mentally retarded children.

I am pleased to say that my own State of Wisconsin is in the forefront of this activity, as indicated by remarks which I have previously made in the Senate.

A LIVING MEMORIAL TO A GREAT MAN

It is a source of gratification to those of us in our Nation's Capital who are interested in this subject that nearby—just 35 miles away—in Gainesville, Va., is another outstanding pioneering project—the Partridge Schools.

The schools are run by the George Everett Partridge Memorial Foundation, a splendid nonprofit, nonendowed organization. It was and is designed to meet the growing nationwide need for residential centers for mentally and emotionally handicapped children.

The Partridge Schools are a living memorial to a great American who devoted a half century of effective endeavor to the study and treatment of mental and personality disorders.

FINE WORK OF MRS. SPECK

It is the good fortune of the foundation to have as its director, his daughter, Mrs. Miriam Partridge Speck, a clinical psychologist. Mrs. Speck was educated at Boston, Yale and Johns Hopkins Universities. She is a former fellow in research at Training School at Vineland, N. J., research assistant at Yale Psychological Clinic—now the Gesell Institute. She has had broad experience in mental hygiene clinics, as consultant for juvenile courts, and organizer of special classes for retarded children in public and private schools.

BROAD SERVICE AT LOW COST

The Partridge Schools help the disabled child. They help the parent. They help the community.

For the child, the schools mean the blessings of test and treatment tailored to meet individual needs, clinical services at leading medical centers in and near the Nation's Capital, self-reliance and group training for citizenship, speech, occupational and play therapy, academic classes daily except weekends, vocational training-homemaking, handicraft, sheltered workshop projects in furniture restoration, carpentry, and so forth; dairy, poultry, truck gardening, and other farm work; recreation games, music, dancing, TV, parties, field trips.

All these and other services are provided in what are regarded as some of the finest individualized services in the Nation at the lowest possible cost. Tuition costs have been kept at the minimum, while achieving top caliber professional standards.

CONTRIBUTIONS NEEDED

More money—more financial support—is, of course, the key to the future increased success of the schools.

Modest amounts—very, very limited, I understand—have already been raised.

A recent benefit was, for example, held, based on the sale of tickets to a performance by the famous entertainer, Danny Kaye, at the Carter Barron Amphitheater. Mr. Kaye has himself visited the school with friends, and was deeply impressed by the fine work that is being done there.

Washington's newspapers have devoted a good deal of well-merited attention to the schools, and more coverage may be expected.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS NEEDED

But vastly expanded financial aid is urgently needed. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars must be raised to purchase the schools' 560-acre dairy farm near the Blue Ridge Mountains which is now only leased.

Friends' and founders' contributions have therefore been warmly invited from individuals and groups. Contributions—which are, of course, tax deductible—should be addressed to: The George Everett Partridge Memorial Foundation, Inc., Mrs. Miriam Partridge Speck, Secretary-Treasurer, Post Office Box 67, Springfield, Va.

I wish the foundation every success. May it serve as an inspiration and a guide for similar fine work all over our Nation.

May it and similar projects receive the support from Federal, State, and local governments which they so eminently deserve.

WE NEED FEDERAL BILL

May I say, incidentally, in this connection, that it is my earnest hope that S. 3620, a bill which I am proud to cosponsor, will not die in the House. We in the Senate have already passed this bill for expanded research in teaching mentally retarded children. The bill has been championed by that tireless friend of the health needs of our Nation, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Finally, with reference to the Partridge Schools, themselves, I ask unanimous consent that a supplementary statement, giving the background of the memorial foundation's noble work be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PARTRIDGE SCHOOLS

WHAT ARE THE PARTRIDGE SCHOOLS?

The Partridge Schools are residential, nonprofit rehabilitation centers for mentally disabled children and youths. The first center was established in Herndon, Va., October 1954 for older boys with moderate mental retardation resulting from brain damage. The second unit opened in Springfield, Va., 6 months later. This was to accommodate young boys and girls, also with brain damage and mental and emotional problems. Because of the need to expand, these 2 centers were consolidated on a 550-acre dairy farm, Route 211, near Gainesville, Va. The schools are licensed under the Virginia Department of Mental Hygiene and Hospitals.

Although there is now but one center, the term "Partridge Schools" is still used because additional units to include other types of mental and emotional problems are planned at the present location.

WHAT TYPES OF CHILDREN ARE NOW BEING ACCEPTED?

At present 34 pupils ranging in age from 3 to 23 years are enrolled from Virginia, the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Brazil. Twenty of these have suffered some form of brain injury, either at birth or in early childhood. Four of these have some form of epilepsy, with seizures now practically under control. Four have cerebral palsy. Twelve have what is called a diffuse damage, in which no one spot in the brain has had any special injury, but where there has been a fine scattering of damage to the nerve endings. In these cases the children appear perfectly normal. They usually express themselves well, and are often mistaken as being normal. However, they usually have some moderate mental retardation. They have difficulty learning academically in spite of enough mental capacity. They are restless, sometimes destructive, and constantly in trouble at school and home. They may become very aggressive, and begin to get involved with the law; or they may withdraw unto themselves and develop serious emotional illness. In addition to these 18 children there are 9 children with mental retardation and emotional disturbances in whose cases diagnosis of brain injury is being considered. There also are four children diagnosed as being mongoloid. The majority of these children, with proper treatment and training in a happy, relaxed atmosphere, can become useful citizens. Those who cannot manage in open society can learn to be productive in the sheltered workshop program being developed at the Partridge Schools. All can be spared a life in a State institution if given help early enough.

HOW DO THE PARTRIDGE SCHOOLS HELP THESE CHILDREN?

For each child the school emphasizes from the beginning the importance of developing self-control; consideration for others; the building of work habits.

No child is accepted for less than 1 year. Custodial cases are not accepted. As most of the children have had numerous examinations by various specialists, an effort is made to secure all available findings. A conference is held with the child's parents and physicians before any new studies are made. If it seems indicated, a complete medical and psychological study is made. Readjustment of medication or new medication may be decided upon. Various laboratory tests may be found necessary. Facilities in one of the nearby medical centers will be used. A staff conference is held and a plan mapped out for the child's treatment. If delicate, the child is built up physically with special diet, rest, and fresh air.

WHAT IS INCLUDED IN THE SCHOOL PROGRAM?

In a dormitory with five other children his age, under the motherly supervision of a nurse, the child learns independence in his personal-social habits.

Five days a week he attends small classes with trained teachers where special materials and teaching methods are used to help him overcome his handicaps. Speech and occupational therapy are included in his program. For the older children and youths, vocational training in household skills, loom weaving, making of hooked rugs, pottery, furniture refinishing, simple carpentry, farm and dairy projects is given. Physical education and recreational programs are emphasized. Religious education plays a prominent part in the child's life. A nearby small chapel, loaned to the school, called the Children's Chapel, is used for nonsectarian services, as well as for recreational activities. Music and dancing are considered important in the child's training. Field trips, visits to restaurants, theaters, are encouraged and arranged as part of the child's regular program. Every opportunity to help the child learn to conduct himself acceptably in society is given to him.

The school staff consists of: A certified clinical psychologist, who serves as director; a registered nurse and 3 practical nurses; 3 academic teachers; 2 part-time occupational therapists; a workshop instructor and supervisor of older boys' activity program; housemother and housefather; chaperon; cook; laundress; general maid; and chauffeur. A local physician is on call at all times. A pediatrician and psychiatrist serve in consultant capacity. Physiotherapy, speech therapy, and additional special services are available through local clinic facilities.

WHAT ARE THE BROADER ASPECTS OF THE PROGRAM?

Because of the Partridge Schools' location within 35 miles of the Nation's Capital on a four-lane highway easily accessible to the various leading medical centers and universities of the greater metropolitan area, the schools offer an unequaled opportunity to serve as a national demonstration program of rehabilitation for the mentally disabled. Medical and psychological research projects are already underway. Treatment with one of the new drugs is being conducted under the supervision of the school's medical staff. Development of diagnostic testing techniques, special materials and teaching methods for brain-injured children play an important part in the overall program. An in-field-service-training program for graduate students in clinical psychology has been established in collaboration with one of the local universities. Professional workers in the fields of mental hygiene and special education are welcome as volunteers to work under supervision of the school staff for practical experience.

At the Partridge Schools there is an opportunity to develop a rehabilitation center for the mentally and emotionally handicapped which can stand as an example to the rest of the Nation.

WHO SPONSORS THE PARTRIDGE SCHOOLS AND HOW ARE THEY FINANCED?

The Partridge Schools are sponsored by the George Everett Partridge Memorial Foundation, incorporated in Maryland in the fall of 1954. The George Everett Partridge Memorial Foundation, Inc., is a nonprofit, nonendowed, tax-exempt organization. Its purpose is to promote treatment centers for mentally and emotionally disabled children and youth. Dr. Partridge, a noted author, psychologist, and educator, died at the age of 83. He had devoted more than 50 years to the study and treatment of delinquency, mental, and personality problems. A semi-invalid, he overcame his own handicaps to the extent that he was able to lead a highly productive life, and to help others overcome theirs. His family and friends decided that an appropriate memorial would be the development of a program to promote treatment centers for the mentally disabled child, often called the forgotten child.

Few schools have programs to include the child with mental problems. Those which have, tend to exclude the child who is nonconforming or in need of individual attention. Funds are available from State and private organizations for the physically handicapped, but resources for the mentally handicapped are almost nonexistent. Because of the great need of these children, the foundation was set up to solicit funds for the establishment of treatment centers to salvage, whenever possible, lives which can become useful to society, rather than a financial drain. With small gifts from Dr. Partridge's family and friends, and from contributions from parents and agencies sponsoring children enrolled in the schools, the program sustained itself during the first difficult year.

With the expanded program and need for more building space and equipment, additional help is sought for the purchase of the present location—the 550-acre dairy farm and buildings—the center can then help more children.

Fifteen percent of our total child population can be expected to be in need of special treatment and training, because of some mental or emotional problem. The majority of these children can be spared a life in a State institution and can become useful citizens, if given the opportunity for the highly specialized kind of help they require during their formative years.

The Shriners sponsor the physically crippled child; Lions Clubs are concerned with the visually handicapped. No civic organization has yet become interested in the mentally handicapped children. Will not some public-spirited organization come forward to lend a helping hand to the forgotten child?

Please send all communications to: Mrs. Miriam Partridge Speck, secretary-treasurer, the George Everett Partridge Memorial Foundation, Inc., Post Office Box 67, Springfield, Va. Telephone Fleetwood 4-8655.

The advisory board includes professional and lay citizens interested in the field of mental hygiene.

Tax on Admissions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. Y. BERRY
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am happy with the action the conference committee has taken with regard to H. R. 9875, which provides a tax exemption for the theaters of the Nation. My only regret is that it was necessary for the House conferees to recede and accept the Senate amendment reducing the amount from $1 to 90 cents.

The bill is designed to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It will provide that the tax on admissions will apply only with respect to the portion of the amount paid in excess of $1.

It will be recalled that under the present law general admissions are free of Federal excise tax if the charge is 50 cents or less. Under the law as now amended, general admissions will be free of tax up to 90 cents. The bill will not affect admissions for which the charge exceeds the exemption figure. In other words, the tax on an admission charge of, say, $1.50 would be 16 cents. The 10 percent tax would be based upon the entire $1.50 and not merely upon the portion of the charge—60 cents—in excess of the 90 cents.

I know from my correspondence and from the many friends I have in the theater industry in my district that there is a serious need for even a greater exemption than this bill now provides. I am hopeful that another session of Congress can increase this exemption.

We owe much to the theater industry in the way of entertainment and relaxation, for long before television and even before radio was perfected, the movies provided a fine entertainment and recreation channel. In addition, there is no better documentation of history than the films of yesterday.

The industry made a fine contribution to the war effort and to our national defense during the war years and the postwar years. Our young men in the service found wholesome and educational entertainment in the movie houses throughout the Nation as well as in foreign service.

The small business people who operate the theaters in our towns and cities are having a struggle to survive, and I believe the elimination of this tax will enable them to keep in business. The relief which we formerly gave in lifting the admission limitation to 50 cents or less has been inadequate for the survival and successful operation of our movie theaters. While the increase to 90 cents is still inadequate, I am sure it will be some help until such time as a subsequent Congress can increase this exemption to where it will be more beneficial to a sagging industry.

Dixon-Yates Contract

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT GORE
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD public statements and communications of the President of the United States with reference to the Dixon-Yates contract, as reported by the press.

There being no objection, the statements and communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 1, 1954]

From the President's news conference, July 1, 1954:

Question. "Mr. President, could you tell us your reasons for ordering the AEC to make a private-power agreement for getting some additional power put in through the TVA?"

Answer. "Well, it was a rather long and complicated story. We had told you people long ago that the TVA was a historical fact, that it was going to be supported and, particularly supported in the purposes written into the law for which it was established. Now, as time went on, we found that TVA had gone far beyond the establishment of steam plants to firm up maximum water power developed in the waters of that region.

"Now, we found projects for installing, building TVA power plants way out on the periphery of this area, which would mean finally that they could best deliver their power on beyond that, and there was no, he knew of no, way in which this thing would be limited.

"The only thing that he wanted with respect to that was a very good look from every angle, and tell them what was the best future for that region, how far they could continue to build up this area at the expense of others. Maybe they should be building the Missouri River or the Susquehanna or the Penobscot or some other.

"Now, one of the contentions made was that they were under an immediate shortage, something had to be done because of this great portion of the power taken by the AEC. The AEC said that they had the authority to buy their power for a given number of years under private purchase. The comparisons of cost, as based on original layout and the annual cost of this power, were long and involved.

"But it looked like a good thing to buy this power privately so that they could get a really good look as to where they are going into the future in terms of expansion because, you see, he had States, representatives of Massachusetts, New York, Indiana, coming to him and saying: 'You are taking our taxes and building up cheap power some place and taking our industries out.'

"He didn't know exactly where all of the truth lay in this thing, and he was trying to find out—this was just a way to give us a chance to study the thing thoroughly."

[From the New York Times of July 8, 1954]

From unofficial transcript of the President's press conference, July 8, 1954:

Question: "Mr. President, Gov. Frank Clement, of Tennessee, has sent you a telegram saying that your remarks here last week regarding TVA were deeply disturbing to him and asking a chance to meet with you and state his case regarding this new proposal for private utilities to come into TVA territory. Have you decided to give him that conference?"

Answer: "As a matter of fact, he hadn't actually seen the telegram yet, but Governor Clements, like any other governor in the United States, could come to see him at any time that a convenient time could be arranged."

[From the New York Times of July 22, 1954]

From the President's news conference, July 21, 1954:

Question: "Mr. President, the Democrats have used some pretty strong language on the Hill this week in attacking the administration proposal to grant a private power contract in the Tennessee Valley area. Republican Senator Cooper, of Tennessee, has also joined critics of the proposal. Is there any chance, any possibility, of the administration changing its position on this issue?"

Answer: "Well, he constantly had stated in front of them that there were always details of anything he proposed where, if he was shown there was a better way of doing it, why, he was perfectly ready to do it.

"Now, he thought he had explained this situation here a couple of weeks ago. This area said it needed power because industries wanted to come into that region. Long ago, the project of harnessing the streams in the area had been completed, and the Federal Government also had built the steam plants to firm up the waterpower potential.

"Now, in these recent years it had been merely a question of producing steam plants. Well, now the problem in his mind, and he would think in everybody's, was if the Federal Government went into the constant production of steam plants, why didn't we go now to the Missouri Valley or to the Ohio or to the Connecticut or the Sacramento or the Pecos or anywhere else, and produce steam plants in that region before we went putting more here?

"He was trying to find out the facts of this whole situation, what it meant. He was, as he had told them before, he was prepared to support TVA as it now stood, with all the strength he had, and anyone who said this was any attempt to destroy the TVA was, to say it in the mildest way he knew, was in error. There was no such thought at all. There was the thought of providing the power while a new and further look was taken at this whole business because the whole United States was concerned and not simply one little area, and he was working for the United States."

Question: "Mr. President, one of the major points in the debate on the Atomic Energy Commission–TVA contract today arose out of testimony before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that three Commissioners of the Atomic Energy Commission opposed signing the contract. Therefore, the Senators are arguing the question of whether the President has the power to order independent agencies to take action that their Administrators or a Commission majority oppose. Would you discuss your attitude toward that problem?"

Answer: "Well, he was not going to discuss it very greatly, very obviously. He had an Attorney General and, when there was a matter of legality arose, why, he had to be governed by what the legal staff of that office decided was correct because they would remember this: It wasn't always a matter of taking authority in these cases, it was a matter of somebody exercising responsibility, and someone had to do it. And, frequently, he supposed lots of people would like to get out of exercising responsibility, but you had to do it when the chips were down.

"Now, in this one, she was telling him things and she was giving him a premise that he didn't know existed. But he would say this: The Atomic Energy Commission he did not believe was an independent Commission in the sense that the ICC or FCC was. It was something that he was compelled to take action on and over which to exercise supervision."

[From the New York Times of July 29, 1954]

From the President's news conference of July 28, 1954:

Question: "Mr. President, you told Mr. Brandt that you wouldn't want to support someone who had opposed you on a major issue. In the last week Senator Cooper, of Kentucky, has voted twice against the administration—once against the TVA contract, and yesterday or last night, rather, against the entire atomic-energy bill. Would you consider that major opposition, sir?"

Answer: "Well, he thought Senator Cooper was mistaken, but he thought that Senator Cooper's record in the Senate was one that he couldn't possibly criticize in any serious way. Now, he has been perfectly honest, he (Senator Cooper) has come to him every time he had had a difference and he (the President) knew that it did not make either of us happy. He believed there was a legality, a point of legal responsibility and legal authority involved, and he thought he (Senator Cooper) had been perfectly honest in that, and he respects a man's honest opinions. So he—don't try to get him to say he was against Senator Cooper; he was not."

Question: "I am not trying to."

[From the New York Times of July 18, 1954]

From the President's press conference of August 17, 1954:

Question: "Mr. President, Stephen Mitchell, the Democratic National chairman, said yesterday you personally ordered the Dixon-Yates power contract awarded to a firm in which one of your closest friends has an interest, and at $90 million more than a competitor syndicate. His office later identified the friend as Bobby Jones. Do you care to comment on that matter?"

Answer: "Well, ladies and gentlemen, he knew when he once went into political life that he would be subjected by many types of strange characters to many kinds of innuendo and allegations. In this case, he must say, and he was a little astonished, that any kind of such innuendo should include a private citizen of the character and standing of Bob Jones.

"He thought there was no gentleman that he knew whose integrity and probity he was more certain of than he was of his.

"Now, as to his (the President's) actions, his own actions, he was no going to defend himself, as he had told the reporters time and again he should not. He merely said this: Of course, he approved the recommendations for this action, and every single official action he took involving the contractual relationships of the United States with anybody and except only when the question of national security was directly involved, was open to the public.

"Any one of you here present might singly or in an investigation group go to the Bureau of the Budget, to the chief of the Atomic Energy Commission, and get the complete record from the inception of the idea to this very minute, and it was all yours. Now that was all he had to say about it."

[From the New York Times of October 28, 1954]

From the President's news conference of October 27, 1954:

Question: "On this secrecy of documents, and so forth——"

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "Why can't we get the Dixon-Yates contract? We got a copy but other people didn't."

Answer: "Well, as a matter of fact, he probably, if he had anything to do with it, would discipline the person that had given them the copy, if he knew them. He didn't know. Here were the facts. He had promised all the documents in the negotiations leading to the making of this contract and, as far as he knew, everybody had been able to see them.

"Next there was a contract made, and the law provided that that contract, when made, was placed before the Congress, and was to remain there until—he believed it was the Joint Committee—the Joint Committee of the Atomic Energy Committee, had the full opportunity to investigate it and go through its details. And when that was done, then it would undoubtedly be made public. But until it had finished its tour in front of the Atomic Energy Commission, he doubted that it would be proper to release it."

Question: "On that point, sir, do you wish the Joint Committee to waive that 30-day period for inspection and have the contract——"

Answer: "No one had asked him to ask them to waive any period. Now, this was what he did know: The Federal Power Commission said this was a proper contract and fair to the Government and all concerned. The TVA authorities had gone over it and said, after incorporation of certain changes they wanted, that it was perfectly satisfactory. The Congress had the last word in the situation, and could go after it if they wanted to, so he felt that the Government was perfectly and splendidly protected."

Question: "The Senate committee has raised some question about the ethics of the actions of some subsidiaries of the Dixon-Yates group. I wonder if that would have any effect upon your thinking on the Dixon-Yates people, and the fact that the contract was let without bid?"

Answer: "Well, he couldn't think of any man in Government whom he trusts more as to his integrity, his commonsense and his business acumen than Lewis Strauss (Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission). Now, he was the one that was at the focal point of making this contract. The Congress—after he (the President) had quoted the Federal Power Commission, he had quoted the TVA—the congressional committee had its right to go over it in detail.

"If they found anything wrong, he was sure there would be someone that would make it public. Now, up until that moment, he had nothing further to do with it; he hadn't seen the contract in its detail, and he hadn't any more comments to make about it."

[From the New York Times of November 11, 1954]

From the President's press conference of November 11, 1954:

Question: "Mr. President, Mr. Thomas Murray, a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, testified before the Joint Committee this week that the top level management of the Atomic Energy Commission was being diverted from its primary mission by what he described as a political controversy over the Dixon-Yates contract. Would you agree with this conclusion and discuss with us, sir, your views on whether the Atomic Energy Commission should be a nonpolitical or a political body?"

Answer: "Well, he thought, of course, that any business organization working for the Government should be nonpolitical, and he deplored any thought that there had been an effort to make this matter political. On the contrary, this contract, to which had been raised some objection, there had been no effort to keep that under cover until after the elections or to keep these—it had been laid out and spread out on the record as fast as it could be, first, the negotiations and, after the contract was once in the hands of Congress, then the country.

"Now, possibly, he had better straighten once again his attitude toward this whole business. It had been represented to him that there was going to be an acute power shortage in the TVA area by 1957.

"Now, there was an area in which the Federal Government had not fully developed the water power, had then built the steam plants to firm up that water power, then had built additional steam plants and was still enlarging some of them. Now, the question became how long did this go along at Federal expense unless it was done in the Smoky Hill Valley, and in the Penobscot Valley, and in the Hudson Valley, and all the rest of the world. It would look ike it was time to take a look at this. So, consequently, he said, 'How can we supply that need without putting the Government in position that in perpetuity it is going to continue to build steam plants anywhere anyone wants them?' Now, one way to do it was to take the needs of the AEC and to see whether they could be supplied and, therefore, provide this extra 600,000 watts it then had been predicted they were going to need in 1957; then it wouldn't damage the people of the area and one would go ahead and give everybody time to take a good look at this and study it out. There was nothing in this contract that could raise by a single cent the prices for—that TVA charged its customers for power, and the contract had been gone over, as he had told the reporters before, by the Federal Power Commission, by TVA, and he believed, the General Accounting Office, all of whom had found it a satisfactory contract. So if there was anything political in it, someone was making it that way, it was nothing political from his viewpoint."

Question: "Mr. President, this week, one of your strong supporters journalistically, one of your strong supporters, the Scripps-Howard papers, called on you to let go of the Dixon-Yates contract. They said it was a dangerous thing politically and would hurt you. Have you changed your mind any on supporting the Dixon-Yates contract from what we understand you said a minute ago, or do we understand that it is going to go through?"

Answer: "Well, he hadn't changed his mind for this simple reason: No better contract had been offered. If the people were going to get power in that region, and if they were going to get it in this amount, he knew of no better way to get it, and no better way had been offered. So, until some better way was offered, he had to stick to this one."

Question: "Mr. President, on that point, why were not the specifications laid down for this, and competitive bids asked?"

Answer: "Well, as far as he knew—now, he didn't want to be quoted here too exactly that he couldn't change his mind—but, as he remembered it, he had been informed that they had put this matter up before a number of utilities, and there had been only two offers received, and one had been, they thought, completely unacceptable, because there had been no risk whatsoever. They remembered, in contracts of the past, where the AEC had made contracts, they had been strictly cost-plus. He rejected those; he thought they weren't good for the Government. He thought it ought to have a contract where there was some risk shared by the building companies, so he had insisted on that. Now, the other one, the other plan, as he understood it, that had been submitted, was again one which the building companies took no risk on."

Question: "As I understand, the specifications were very general and there was only one other company made a bid."

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "And I also understand that TVA was not consulted in the initial steps."

Answer: "Well, that would have to be checked up with AEC and with the Bureau of the Budget. He couldn't be expected to recall every detail."

Question: "No."

Answer: "But he did know they had come and sat in front of him often enough and he assumed TVA knew about it."

Question: "The previous Chairman of TVA testified that he was not called in on the initial proceedings to give the expert advice."

Answer. "Well, he did believe this: He believed that the prior Chairman's whole attitude toward the matter, toward this particular matter had been well known, but he was not—he didn't recall, and he thought that he (the questioner) had got places to find out that detail."

Question: "May I ask one more question, please?"

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "Are you adamant against TVA expanding further?"

Answer: "Well, he said 'adamant.' He hoped that he was old enough that he didn't think there was anything particularly sacrosanct about his decisions and conclusions. But he did believe that if the Government continued to expand there, what was it going to do about the other sections of this country? And he thought there had to be a policy deliberately adopted by the United States before it made these things so lopsided. Because, let him tell those present, for every argument he had had for TVA, he had many, many people, political leaders, come to his office and say: 'Why do you continue to give them cheap power and take away our industries, and then we pay taxes to support them?' Now, he didn't know that there was any justice to that argument and, as he had said again and again, he had put a man down there from whom he believed they could all expect absolutely objective and complete reporting on the thing, and he hoped they got it, because he would like to know what the answer was."

Question: "There are two kinds of expansions, sir; one is geographical and the other one is expanding power production."

Answer: "That is right."

Question: "Inside TVA's area. Now, do you oppose expansion both ways?"

Answer: "Well, again he said, he didn't know too much about it. But if they—look, if they, if the Federal Government was committed just to building power in the TVA and giving them 100 percent of all they would ever want in their estimates for the next 5 years, why didn't he do it in the Mississippi Valley; that was what he wanted to know and no one answered for him. He asked them—the TVA people came in his office and stood around and argued and he said, 'Well, now are you ready to support this kind of development for the Upper Mississippi?' And they just looked at him and said, 'That is outside the question.' But it wasn't to him. He believed that the United States should be treated fairly all the way through."

Question: "Their argument down there was that the Federal Government was their power monopoly in that area. Any expansion they got in that region must come from the Federal Government."

Answer: "Well, to his mind, he would hate to be admitting that he was completely and absolutely dependent upon the vagaries of the Federal Government that might do anything at any moment, and didn't believe any section of this country had to be completely dependent upon the Federal Government unless it was in the District here."

TEXT OF LETTER BY EISENHOWER ON DIXON-YATES

WASHINGTON, November 11.—The text of a letter from President Eisenhower to Representative W. STERLING COLE, Republican, of New York, chairman of the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee, on the controversial Dixon-Yates contract follows:

"DEAR STUB: On several occasions you and I have discussed the administration plan to relieve TVA of part of its obligation to furnish electric power to AEC in order that TVA, without additional steam plants built at taxpayers' expense, may have an adequate supply of electric power for its customers through 1957.

"My general thinking on the subject is this: It seems to me that all arguments for the construction by the Federal Government of the additional steam plants ignore this one and very important truth: If the Federal Government assumes responsibility in perpetuity for providing the TVA area with all the power it can accept, generated by any means whatsoever, it has a similar responsibility with respect to every other area and region and corner of the United States of America.

"Logically, every section of the United States should have the same opportunities, and the Federal Government should not discriminate between the several regions in helping to provide this type of facility. My own conviction is that we have not been alert enough in making certain of this equality of treatment. If this is the case, then it is high time that other regions were getting the same opportunities.

"I cannot believe that Americans, in general, disapprove of attempting to place all regions on a basis of equality in this regard. Consequently, there must either be some reexamination of any plans which would call for the Federal Government to supply all the additional power capacity that might be needed in the future in the Tennessee Valley, or logically we would have to begin plans for a gigantic power delevopment to cover the entire Nation equitably.

"DESIGNED TO GAIN TIME

"The directive to the AEC to make arrangements for the purchase of private power—either directly or by finding a new private source to replace available TVA power—was designed to allow time for a thorough examination of this whole vast field, without hurting the citizens of the valley.

"As a consequence of these facts, I believe that the project for building new plants at Federal expense—implying a purpose of continuing this process indefinitely in the future—is therefore wholly indefensible unless it should become part of a vast national plan. If this is to be national policy, it is most certainly a project that demands earnest and prayerful study. In the meantime, the citizens of that region will not be deprived of the additional power they need for the next several years.

"It seems to me that there has been a very great deal of talk and argument—much of it partisan—about issues that are really clear and simple.

"NO INTENT TO HURT TVA

"No one in this administration has any intention of destroying or damaging TVA or of diminishing its effectiveness in any way. But this is not the same thing as fastening on the Federal Government a continuing and never-ending responsibility which I frankly do not believe is logical nor, in the long run, in the best interests of the country.

"The administration plan, and all facts concerning its development, have been before the public for months. I hope that the Joint Atomic Energy Committee will give the plan, and the proposed contract to carry it into effect, the fullest consideration that the committee deems necessary. If, however, after such consideration, the committee is of the opinion that the final contract terms are completely satisfactory, it would be clearly desirable and in the best interests of the people of the TVA area that any additional waiting periods be waived, so that construction may begin as soon as possible and people in the TVA area may make their plans for the future.

"With warm personal regard,

"Sincerely,

"DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER."

[From the New York Times of March 17, 1955]

From the President's press conference of March 17, 1955:

Question: "Mr. President, I have two questions about an oldie. The Dixon-Yates contract is apparently tied up in the courts, and a majority of the TVA Board has lately asked you again for appropriations for the Fulton steam plant. I wonder whether that would prompt you, sir, to reconsider the problem of power in west Tennessee; and, the second question, would the construction of a plant, generating plant, by Memphis itself not fit into your philosophy, sir?"

Answer: "Well, I know of no reason, to take your second question first, I know of no reason whatsoever that Memphis has not a complete right to manufacture or set up any producing plant it wants to. And certainly I would favor it. I have nothing at all against local ownership of power. I think in many cases it is not only a good thing; in some cases it has been proved to be very effective. But there is one thing I always want to point out to you people when I talk about governmental authority, responsibility, and operation. Don't forget this: When the Federal Government does this, they can print money to do the job. Nobody else can, and there is a very great difference; because the second that the Federal Government starts to print money to do these things, they are taking 1 cent, or at least their proportion, out of every dollar that any of you might happen to have in your pockets. Now that has the effect of cheapening money, and I don't think we ought to go into that.

"Now, as to the review of the case, it has not come up to me in any way in that form, and I don't know whether there is any reason for review or not. But I do say what the local governments or anything else that falls within the State or city authorities, I have no objection to it, to their doing it whatsoever."

[From the New York Times of June 30, 1955]

From the President's press conference of June 30, 1955:

Question: "Mr. President, one of the justifications for the Dixon-Yates contract was that the Memphis area needed the power, needed the 600,000 kilowatts. Last week, as you probably know, the Memphis City Council voted to build a steam plant of their own of about 600,000 kilowatts. I wonder if, in your opinion, the Government should now proceed with the Dixon-Yates contract or cancel it at the cheapest possible terms."

Answer: "I haven't had this matter brought to my attention by any of my responsible associates since I saw that suggestion in the paper. But I do know this: that when I was first visited by a delegation from Tennessee and I suggested that the city of Memphis go ahead and build their own plant, they said it was an impossibility under the whole TVA system, and the TVA contract was an impossibility; that's all I know about it."

Question: "Senator KEFAUVER charged on the Senate floor yesterday that the Budget Bureau was trying to conceal what he called a scandal in the Dixon-Yates contract negotiations regarding the employment of Mr. Adolphe Wenzell of the First Boston Corp. Senator KNOWLAND says there is no corruption in it, and that he thinks you were just trying to help the Tennessee Valley get some power. I wondered if Mr. Hughes of the Budget Bureau had cleared with you his refusal to give Mr. KEFAUVER the information he was asking down there?"

Answer: "Mr. Hughes came to see me, went over the situation, and I repeated to him the general instructions, I think, that I expressed once publicly in front of this body, that every single pertinent paper on the Dixon-Yates contract, from its inception until the final writing of the contract, would be made available, I think I said at that time, to the press, much less to any committee.

"Now, I do stand on this: Nobody has a right to go in and wreck any processes of Government by taking every single file—and some of you have seen our file rooms and know their size—and wreck the entire filing system and paralyze the processes of Government while they are going through them.

"There are—these files are filled with every kind of personal note—I guess my own files are filled with personal notes from my own staff all through, they are honeycombed with them. Well, now, to drag those things out where a man says to me, 'I think so-and-so is a bad person to appoint to so-and-so, and you shouldn't have him,' all he had was his own opinion. You can't drag those things out and put them before the public with justice to anybody and we are not going to do it. But at the time that I gave those instructions, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Strauss, whoever else was involved, got together every single document that was pertinent to this thing and put it out.

"Now, as far as the Wenzell report, Mr. Wenzell was never called in or asked a single thing about the Dixon-Yates contract. He was brought in to—as a technical adviser in the very early days when none of us here knew nothing about the bookkeeping methods of TVA or anything else. He was brought in as a technical adviser and nothing else, and before this contract was ever even proposed."

Question. "Mr. President, a little while ago you stated that Mr. Wenzell was never called in about the Dixon-Yates contract, and there seemed to be some testimony before the SEC and before a committee that he had served as a consultant, I wondered if you were—"

Answer. "He did serve as a consultant at one time."

Question. "Of the Dixon-Yates?"

Answer. "No; I think—now, I will check this up. My understanding is that quickly as the Dixon-Yates thing came up he resigned and we got as our consultant a man named Adams from the Power Commission here itself to come over and be the consultant so as to have him because he (Wenzell) was connected with a great Boston financial company."

Question. "Mr. President, had you been informed that he had no connection at all with the Dixon-Yates?"

Answer. "My understanding of it, and it may have been, that part of it there may have been, an overlap of a week or two, there I am not sure of."

Question. "Would there be any change in your position on that if there was material that he had served as a consultant on that?"

Answer. "If he had served as a consultant on that and brought in a definite recommendation to us I would be very delighted to make that public. But I just don't believe there is a thing in it about it. However, I will have it checked again."

[From the New York Times of July 7, 1955]

From the President's press conference of July 6, 1955:

Question. "Mr. President, many Democrats on Capitol Hill are now claiming that your decision to reopen or to restudy the Dixon-Yates matter is a political victory for their side, and claim that it represents a backing down on your part on this whole matter. Could you discuss that with us, sir?"

Answer. "Well, I hadn't heard this particular point. The first group that ever came to my office to urge upon me the building with Federal funds of a new steam plant in the TVA were very insistent that this be done. It's the only way they could get a plant; and they said the city of Memphis is going to be without power in that whole region; and I recommended to them that the ctiy of Memphis build its plant just like New York City or Abilene, Kans., would if they had to have a plant. And they showed to me or attempted to show to me this was impossible in their area because of the type of contract that TVA had made with all its customers. It is an exclusive sort of contract. If you take any power from TVA then you may not, under your contract, get any power anywhere else.

"Now, that was the situation at that moment. Actually, I am delighted that the city of Memphis or any other local community, when it comes to the simple building of a power station through steam-plants methods and with no flood control or navigation or other factors in it, do it themselves.

"I believe we should do it ourselves. So I am not really concerned as to who is claiming political victories. This is in accordance with the philosophy in which I believe."

Question. "Mr. President, returning to the Dixon-Yates question, have you had a report from Mr. Hughes as yet so that you could tell us whether you will or will not cancel that private agreement?"

Answer. "Well, I had a report just a few minutes ago from Mr. Hughes. But the investigation by the Attorney General and by the Budget Bureau is still going on, because there must be determined the complete feasibility of the city building its own powerplant. Otherwise we might proceed quite a ways on that proposition, and find that it was an impossible thing, due to some kind of legal or other limitations. The TVA has reported to me that there will be no need for this power in TVA and, of course, in that event, if that is substantiated, then there would be no need for building this plant."

Question. "Then you would cancel under such circumstances?"

Answer. "Under—if all of these circumstances meet the standards that we have set up, yes."

Question. "You spoke, sir, of the continuing investigation of the feasibility of the city of Memphis"——

Answer. "Yes; and that will be"——

Question. "Is that likely to take some time, a week or 10 days?"

Answer. "Well, I didn't ask them, but my impression of this was that it might be finished up in a couple of weeks."

Question. "Mr. President, there has arisen between Budget Director Hughes and Senator KEFAUVER relative to the questioning of the five witnesses from the Budget Bureau in the Dixon-Yates controversy, and I wondered if you would care to discuss for us"——

Answer. "Five witnesses, you say?"

Question. "Five witnesses in the Dixon-Yates controversy relative to the part that Mr. Wenzell played in the Dixon-Yates case."

Answer. "Well, Mr. Wenzell was the only one I heard about."

Question. "The thing I wanted to find out was where you thought how much discretion Mr. Hughes had?"

Answer. "I think Mr. Wenzell is entitled to tell the court—I mean to tell the investigating committee exactly what he did. You will remember he was called in to investigate certain accounting and financing systems of power establishments and their tax situation, and that was early in this administration. And he, I believe, submitted on that a fairly formal written report. I have no doubt he will show that written report to the committee if they want to see it, although it has no bearing on the thing they are now talking about. Later he was for a period, I believe of 60 days, in early 1954; he was here as a technical adviser, as they were trying to devise some form of contract that would befit the situation. He, I have no doubt in all matters of fact, will testify freely before this investigating committee."

Question. "Mr. President, I had in mind more the discretion that you felt your agency had had, not necessarily Mr. Wenzell but with regard to other witnesses. There were five other witnesses before in the Budget Bureau that the committee had asked to come down; and Mr. Hughes had informed the committee that they should not—"

Answer. "Mr. Hughes has not talked to me, as I recall it. Now, maybe Mr. Hughes talked to me about it and it slipped my mind. I have explained my attitude here time and again. If anybody in an official position of this Government does anything which is an official act, and submits it either in the form of recommendation or anything else that is properly a matter for investigation if Congress so chooses, provided that national security is not involved.

"But when it comes to the conversations that take place between any responsible official and his advisers or exchange of little, mere little slips, or this or that, expressing personal opinions on the most confidential basis, those are not subject to investigation by anybody, and if they are, will wreck the Government. There is no business that could be run if it—if there would be exposed every angle thought that an adviser might have because in the process of reaching an agreed position there is many, many conflicting opinions to be brought together. And if any commander is going to get the free, unprejudiced opinions of his subordinates he had better protect what they have to say to him on a confidential basis. It is exactly, as I see it, like a lawyer and his client or any other confidential thing of that character."

Question. "Mr. President, on the basis of what you have been told about the role of Adolphe Wenzell in this Dixon-Yates contract, do you regard that role as proper?"

Answer. "Indeed, yes."

[From the Memphis Commercial Appeal of July 12, 1955]

July 11, 1955: "On leaving the White House, Mayor Tobey said the cancellation of the contract 'is unquestionably a victory for public power.' Asked what President Eisenhower's reaction was, the mayor smiled and said, 'the President is very happy about it.' The White House issued a statement saying President Eisenhower was 'delighted' to see Mayor Tobey and to learn of Memphis' decision to build its own plant. The President told the mayor, the statement said, that the President long has favored such a plan as an alternative to building another TVA steam plant. The President said he saw no more reason to spend Federal funds on a steam plant to provide power for the Tennessee Valley than one to provide power from the valley of the Kansas River, the statement said. It added that only after the President was informed that Memphis could not build its own plant was the Dixon-Yates plan developed. 'The Dixon-

Yates plan was developed as a means of assuring the Memphis area it would not suffer a power shortage as a result of the siphoning off of additional power by the Atomic Energy Commission,' the statement said."

[From the New York Times of July 28, 1955]

From the President's press conference of July 27, 1955:

Question: "Mr. President, there has been testimony of the SEC Chairman that Sherman Adams intervened before the SEC which was a quasi-judicial body. Testimony was given by the Chairman on that score. The Democrats are contending that there was something improper in intervening with any quasi-judicial body. I wondered if you looked into that and you have any comment you would like to make about it."

Answer: "I looked into it only to this extent: I am sure that Mr.—head of the Commission—has given the entire story. I understand he is back before the committee. And certainly if he had omitted any details, he should give them now. And I believe that Governor Adams has informed the Senate committee that he hasn't a single detail to add; that the story has been told and that is all there is to it."

Question: "In connection with the Dixon-Yates matter, and in view of the fact that the Senate investigation subcommittee recently brought out for the first time the part played in initiating the Dixon-Yates contract by Adolphe Wenzell of the First Boston Corp., which corporation later became the financing agent for Dixon-Yates, in view of all of that, do you believe your directions last summer for disclosure of the complete record in the case were carried out by the agencies concerned?"

Answer: "Well, I didn't know that anyone had alleged that he was the initiator, because no such statement has ever been made to me. But what I have done is this: I have gotten back Mr. Dodge who was Director of the Budget when all this was done, when the 1954, I believe, policy on this statement, on this whole proposition was made, and he is going now before one of the committees. Isn't that correct?"

The President's press secretary: "Yes, sir."

Answer: "He is going down before one of the committees with instructions to do this: to tell every possible item that has anything whatsoever to bear on Dixon-Yates and see whether we can get the whole list of information properly coordinated and placed before the people that are investigating it."

Question: "I hate to go back to Dixon-Yates again, but there was one thing I don't think was completely clear. There were some AEC officials, Mr. Fields and Mr. Cook, who testified that Mr. Wenzell's name was knowingly eliminated from the Dixon-Yates chronology; and, of course, they stated this was on the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget. I wondered if you knew anything about this, and if you did know of it, if you would like to comment on whether you thought it was important."

Answer: "I don't intend to comment on it any more at all. Now, I think I have given to this conference, time and again, the basic elements of this whole development and everything that I could possibly be expected to know about it. I said Mr. Dodge, who initiated this whole thing, is going down before the committee to again begin the process of taking this thing from its inception and following it through until he turned over to Mr. Hughes, and I believe that Mr. Hughes is to be there if they want him again. Now, they can tell the entire story and I don't know exactly such details as that. How could I be expected to know? I never heard of it."

America's Vital Engineering Resource

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, during the past several years I have delivered a number of major addresses on the subject of expanding America's vital engineering resource.

I have done so because of the obviously critical need for such expansion, in view of Soviet Russia's enormous strides in technological advance.

Almost everyone in our country is aware that the Soviets are reportedly graduating twice as many engineers and technicians as we are.

In view of my deep interest in this subject, I was pleased to receive an invitation from the National Society of Professional Engineers to prepare an article for the August issue of the excellent magazine, American Engineer.

I am happy to have contributed this article which has become the lead piece of the August issue.

I send to the desk now the text of this article and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STRENGTHENING AMERICA'S ENGINEERING RESOURCES

(By Senator ALEXANDER WILEY)

"Danger—we are falling behind in the race for engineering manpower."

This and a hundred other terse warning signals have been hoisted all over America.

From every forum of public opinion, the press, radio, and television, from the world of science and the world of politics and government, from private industry, labor and agriculture, has come the urgent message: "America must expand its engineering resources!"

Responding to this problem, the great engineering profession itself has applied its enormous talents and abilities toward helping to meet the challenge. Of course, too, in Washington, in the executive branch of our Government, significant steps have been taken to take a comprehensive new look at why the Soviets are surging ahead of us in the quantity of engineers and technicians.

In the legislative branch, as well, as the pages of the American Engineer have reflected, our Senators and Representatives in great numbers have focused their attention on this problem.

However, many serious observers are surprised not so much at the engineering shortage, which is, of course, deeply disturbing; they are surprised that it took us so long to wake up to it. They are surprised that only at this late stage have we become aware of the fact that we are falling behind in this stiffly competitive race.

The danger signs were present for us to see, for a long, long time. Even a layman such as myself, who is not especially familiar with the engineering profession pointed out years ago that America was entering into a dramatic new engineering age in which the engineer would play a more important role than ever before in man's history. I pointed out, too, that in this new age, an ambitious totalitarian system such as that of the Soviet Union could set a top-priority target of scientific and technical progress; and it could reach that target by sacrificing all other so-called nonessential activities.

Unfortunately, many complacent Americans tended to downgrade the Kremlin's ruthless determination to build up its horse-and-buggy economy, as well as its military prowess. Today, we Americans belatedly face up to the acute threefold challenge of Soviet science and technology:

1. In direct military strength, with the world's largest ground force and air force, and second largest navy.

2. In industrial surges on the home front, in vast Russia, itself, 7.8 million square miles with 200 million people, and in the sprawling slave empire of 700 million more.

3. From outside the Iron Curtain, in the so-called cold war, economic penetration of underdeveloped countries.

Our most serious problem arises, of course, from the crucial Soviet military challenge. A day hardly passes without some new warnings that the Russians are making enormous strides in the fields of supersonic jet fighters and long-range bombers; atomic and hydrogen bombs, with an increased punch of more and more megatons; longer and longer range guided missiles, with even deadlier accuracy. The rate for the so-called "ultimate weapon"—the intercontinental ballistic missile—looms by far as the most crucial of all the phases of this many-sided military competition.

But the military race while paramount, is hardly the only competition we face. From my vantage point as senior Republican on the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I can note in civilian fields, the worldwide signs of the forward surge of Soviet engineering. This is evidenced: Inside Russia, in its magnificent buildup of heavy industry, which the Kremlin seeks, as a byproduct to display as showpieces to visiting delegations from underdeveloped nations; outside Russia, in its Khrushchev-Bulganin-type peaceful economic penetration. This latter phase is best illustrated by the numerous Soviet offers of "loans with no strings attached" for everything from new hydro-electric projects to sewerage systems and road paving in the neutralist, uncommitted bloc of the world.

Consider now, both of these civilian phases—internal and external. Within Russia itself, all observers have agreed that the Reds have made enormous strides in industrialization but, of course, at a staggering price of slavery, mass human misery, and deprivation. According to "The National Economy of the U. S. S. R." (if you can believe it) between 1940 and 1955:

Red steel production rose 142 percent—from 18.3 to 45.3 million tons. (In the same period, free enterprise—American steel output—already at mammoth levels—rose 67 percent—to 117 million tons.)

Coal output increased 136 percent, from 165.9 to 391 million tons. (Comparable United States output decreased 3.5 percent.)

Soviet oil gushed up 128 percent to 482.9 million barrels. (United States comparison—a rise of 82 percent to 2.5 billion barrels.)

Soviet electric power—up 252 percent to 170.1 kilowatt-hours annually. (United States kilowatt-hours rose 275 percent.)

The same Red report incidentally quotes Soviet educational enrollment of 50 million students, including 1.9 million in technical schools, 1.8 million in colleges, and 30 million in high schools. It also boasts a jump in the number of civilian engineers from 289,000 in 1941 to 585,000 in 1955—a 102 percent increase. In the United States our total rose 100 percent, from 300,000 to 600,000.

The key fact which must be borne in mind is that all this Red growth was over the base of an exceedingly primitive economy, including an economy devastated in World War II. Obviously, the Kremlin has been absolutely determined to shatter all its previous economic targets—no matter what the price in other sacrifice.

Meanwhile, throughout Asia, the Middle East and Africa, newly sovereign nations with primitive economies of their own, tend to gape in awe at the rise of Communist Russia and China from primitive underdevelopment. What Asia, the Mideast, and Africa may tend to forget is the blood-price exacted in the growth of these Communist countries. That blood price was revealed in all its hideous dimensions in Khrushchev's denunciation of the murderous tyrant, Stalin.

Asia, the Mideast, and Africa may not, however, remember. "If Russia and China could stride forward so rapidly, so can we," say the underdeveloped peoples. "Let us therefore, welcome Soviet and Polish and Czech and Peiping Government help," the neutralists continue.

And so, throughout the world the Soviet engineers and technicians are swarming. So, too, Soviet salesmen, representing Iron Curtain publicly owned enterprises, are offering the widest variety of products in exchange for the products of underdeveloped lands. The Soviets and satellites are particularly willing to take in exchange products which are in surplus and which the free world may not be able to absorb.

Thus, we see the battle for men's minds, as well as the battle for men's pocketbooks and stomachs. Of course, we Americans have been diligent in many respects in combating the Soviet challenge, militarywise, industrialwise, and aidwise throughout the world.

Our own private enterprise system has been our basic bulwark of strength on exporting both capital and know-how to underdeveloped areas. Private banks and the World Bank, have helped vitally to initiate development projects to supplement the efforts of an agency like the International Cooperation Administration, as well as the efforts of the Export-Import Bank. Look at a descriptive worldwide summary and at a globe or a map and you can pinpoint hundreds of farflung major engineering projects, representing uplifting work on a governmental, semigovernmental, and private level.

We have literally "transformed the earth" in country after country. We have helped to bring the industrial age to places which were not very long out of the bare beginnings of the iron age. American engineers, representing the great corporations of the United States, have built every conceivable type of installations in foreign parts.

As a matter of fact, one particular fact has always been somewhat disturbing to me, concerning our governmental aid agencies for economic and technical assistance, with their huge budgets, representing taxpayers' hard-earned savings. It is the fact that the agencies have not utilized to the fullest degree that they should, the services of private engineer consulting firms, or for that matter, of top-notch private economic consultants.

There has, frankly speaking, been too much of a tendency for governmental aid agencies to build up their own bureaucratic empires, huge and unwieldy official staffs. Their concern, in turn, has not always been with an actual private enterprise solution of an underdeveloped nation's problem, but rather, often with merely the filing of a sufficient number of papers, forms, and reports for artificial palliatives during a particular fiscal year. My readers may well be familiar with this distinction which I draw and which definitely occurs at times between the work of some Government employees in aid agencies and the work of high-grade private engineering firms. I don't want to be unfair to the former or to overstate the case for the latter, but I have seen a great many instances where private business know-how could have accomplished far more than a Government payroller's relatively amateurish performance.

I first drew attention to this frequent distinction a good many years ago. My readers may be interested in looking up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 96, part 5, pages 6597–6598, for a discussion of what I believe to have been the serious deficiencies of the then Truman administration's high-aspiring, but at times low-achieving point-4 program. "Get more private engineering know-how," I urged.

My interest then and now was in getting the most effective job done for Uncle Sam at the least possible cost. Private engineering firms these days are hardly lacking in a sufficient amount of business from purely private sources. So, my interest is not in more Government business for them, as such, but in more constructive results and yes, more economic results for Uncle Sam. I feel that we of the legislative branch in fulfilling our function of checks and balances with the executive branch, have a responsibility to point out facts of this nature.

Private business sources which other members on the Foreign Relations Committee have cited a large amount of impressive private engineering or economic work overseas in true free enterprise fashion which our executive branch might well seek to emulate. Consider the very successful (Daniel) Bell Mission, the current programing of industrial development in the Philippines and in Peru, and the development of sulfur reserves in Mexico. If you want specific instances, I cite these without attempting to judge a larger number of worthy counterparts in other areas. But these particular projects involving engineers of international reputation like Michael J. Deutch of Washington, D. C., and economists like Klein and Sachs of New York, indicate what an objective—I emphasize—objective, professional viewpoint can accomplish, in solving a problem, and not just supplying bureaucratic palliatives.

Meanwhile in our own country, the engineer is coming into his own. One can hardly open the business pages of a magazine or newspaper without reading that an engineer has become president or chairman of the board of some great American corporation. But where is the engineering leadership of tomorrow? And how are we going to get a sufficient number of engineers in the first place? In other words, what are we going to do to lick the engineering shortage?

Let me suggest just a few of what should be our minimum approaches. Let me later spell out background reasons behind a few of these approaches.

1. We must take comprehensive steps to bring effectively and continually to the attention of the youngsters in our grade schools and high schools—particularly our still untapped womanpower—the opportunities available in an engineering career.

2. Basically, in counseling both boys and girls in their early years in school, we must seek the fullest possible emphasis on science and mechanics for those who show aptitude in these fields.

3. We must help improve the overall quality of the great American teaching profession. It is the teacher—math, physics and others—who will help fan the spark of engineering talent which a youngster may show at an early age. Such a teacher must, in turn, be properly paid, must have appropriate recognition from society, must be properly trained in his or her own right in order to be able to bring out the best in talent.

4. We must increase our understanding of the reasons for dropouts from the grade schools, as well as from the high schools, colleges, and universities of our land. We must take remedial steps to minimize those dropouts, both within school and between the various steps up the ladder of education. Such efforts against dropouts must include: a. Making more generally available accurate, directly useful information on sources of scholarships, tuition grants, loan funds, and the like. b. Considering the expansion of our own Federal programs for scholarships for talented individuals.

5. Through the tax laws and any other means, we must encourage the great private enterprise system of America to help strengthen our engineering resource. We must give encouragement and inducements to industry to broaden the base of our engineering talent and to sharpen its proficiency.

6. We must take whatever steps are necessary to help strengthen the great private and public university system in America, so as to increase its ability to help meet this problem in all fields of engineering.

7. We must strengthen Uncle Sam's own program for recruitment and maintenance of engineering talent. The Federal Government must be able to get, and keep, for as long as necessary, the top talent which it needs in all fields of endeavor, particularly in military application.

8. Simultaneously, the Federal Government must consider still further expansion of its existing university and private contract work for research and development.

These, then, are but a few of the facets of our meeting this shortage problem. I have not attempted to specify all the possible remedies, because I do not presume that any single layman, myself or anyone else, can come up with all or even most of the answers. But I feel certain that by diligent teamwork among all interested sources, we can begin to make a dent in the critical manpower situation.

Now, let me spell out just a few of the background reasons for my suggestions. And let me touch upon a few areas which much of our public may tend to underestimate.

In the first instance, we are not simply seeking a vastly expanded quantity of engineers; naturally, we want an ever-improved quantity of engineers. We have good reason to be proud that our American engineers rank so high from the standpoint of quality. And we are interested in maintaining and increasing that qualitative superiority. I welcome, therefore, the spendid efforts being made by much of American industry in encouraging its existing engineers to sharpen their talent through post-graduate work.

Unfortunately, the percentage of engineers taking postgraduate studies has been dropping instead of increasing. So, many private companies' foresight in now encouraging more of their engineering talent to study for their doctorates, comes at a most opportune time. Moreover, companies have set up programs to send at least a few of their top engineers to graduate schools full time. Others are planning to send their personnel to special graduate courses for a few hours a week on company time. Some are trying to persuade graduate school facilities to set up off-campus schools for their engineers. They are offering to help these schools build facilities and they are even helping to pay instructors.

A second point which many Americans tend to lose sight of is the fact that almost invariably when we talk of the engineering profession, we think of male engineers. Here in the United States, despite the magnificent opportunities which we offer to our womenfolk and despite their usual splendid capitalization on such opportunities, they surely have not made full contribution in this particular field. Since 1953, when bachelor degrees in engineering were granted to 33 women, the number rose to 62 for each of the following years. But of all the students enrolled in engineering in 1955, less than one-half of 1 percent, or only 1,074 were women.

Contrast this with the situation in Soviet Russia. In 1940, the Soviets credited women with constituting 19.4 percent of their engineering force. An analysis in our own country of the 1950 census, reported by the Scientific Manpower Commission, showed that only 0.7 percent of all the employed engineers were women. That certainly indicates the present need of more American lady engineers.

A third point which we tend to overlook is that an enormous number of talented youngsters who could probably make excellent engineers, cease all educational efforts after they graduate from high school. Thus, the Commission on Human Resources and Advanced Training indicated that scarcely more than half of the top graduates from high school go to college, and of those who enter college more than half drop out before graduation. When we apply these figures to the boys and girls in high school who have potential qualities necessary for service as engineers and scientists, we note that 8 out of 10 drop out and never graduate. They probably become good citizens, but they could make an infinitely larger contribution to the technical demands of our age if they were to continue.

Just why do they drop out of school? Lack of finances certainly is an important reason, but there are undoubtedly a good many other reasons as well which we had better examine quickly, and then take remedial action.

Still another phase of the problem is that we don't pay enough attention to preventing drop-outs from schools of engineering. I would like to cite just a few figures from the schools of my own State.

My readers are aware that I have the honor to represent a State with as proud an engineering background as virtually any other in the country. Four of her schools of engineering and technology are so outstanding as to be listed by the United States Office of Education among 216 American schools which granteed first degrees in engineering to 22,589 graduates last year. Unofficial figures for this June's graduations step that figure up to 30,000.

Nearly 60 percent of Wisconsin's engineers are graduated from our great University of Wisconsin at Madison. About 30 percent come from our privately-endowed and world-renowned Marquette University at Milwaukee. Two other schools with graduates listed by the United States Office of Education are the fine Milwaukee School of Engineering and the Wisconsin Institute of Technology at Platteville.

Our Badger graduates may be found in top spots throughout our country and the world. Their contributions in all phases of engineering are impressive, and it doesn't take an admitted Wisconsin booster to hail that fact. But here are the enrollment facts to consider. In 1955, the total enrollment of the four Wisconsin engineering schools to which I have referred was 5,712. That represented an encouraging gain over their enrollment of 4,431 in the fall of 1953. Each year's enrollment was around 2.6 percent of that of all engineering schools in the country, which, in 1955, had advanced to 22,488.

In 1953 Wisconsin schools graduated 569 engineers, or nearly 2.4 percent of the Nation's graduate class of that year. In 1955, the new engineers from Wisconin's four colleges numbered 430. Somehow, during four years of college about 150 students dropped out. What happened to cause the drop in potential graduates? Obviously, this is not simply a Wisconsin problem; the factors responsible for the drop-outs undoubtedly prevail throughout our Nation.

Still another phase is the fact that our United States distribution of engineers is not proportionate to the needs in all of your profession's major and growing categories. Again, let me cite the facts in my own State: Nearly 60 percent of Wisconsin's talent is enrolled in electrical and mechanical engineering phases. As important as these specialties are, there results to some degree an apparent and relative underemphasis of such vital fields as aeronautical engineering, architectural engineering, agricultural, geophysical engineering, and engineering physics.

But in the light of recent dramatic developments in, say, aeronautics and the uses of nuclear energy (many of which are reflected in the growing industries of my own State), it would appear to a layman that some of these latter, rather understressed phases of engineering might well be given increased attention in our able engineering schools. Of course, ours is and must remain a free system—with universal, individual free choice and initiative, but we dare not ignore national, yes, international needs, as well. Observing the engineering profession, I have been pleased to note the increasing amount of civic participation by your members in all phases of American life. We truly need the type of cool, factual, objective thinking which our engineers can bring to bear upon local, State, and national problems—on everything from local commercial rezoning to the awesome problems of the shrunken world of the jet age.

It is a fact, however, that our engineers are still under-represented in many high councils of our Government. Look at the membership of the United States Congress, or of your own State legislature, or of your city council, and ask yourself how large a proportion of the members are engineers, as compared, say, with lawyers or members of the other professions. The answer is, of course, very few, too few. That is why the engineer's greater role is essential in all segments of American life. An increasing role on the part of engineers in their own technical and professional societies is likewise necessary. Through these organizations, engineers throughout the 48 States of the Union gain nationwide recognition and renown they could not possibly attain individually, for their profession and for their Nation.

Similarly, the sound registration of engineers throughout the 48 States of the Union is a most welcome step in the engineering profession's history in our country.

We may expect ever higher standards to be established in this profession. And naturally, to the extent that engineers strengthen their own role in America, they strengthen America itself.

In conclusion, as I wrote at the start, danger signals are to be found everywhere—at home and abroad. But so are signals of opportunity, of promise, of hope—if we but use our God-given intelligence and energy. We as a Nation will not fail in this historic hour. With God's help, we will help usher mankind into a new era of fulfillment—of peace and prosperity and freedom.

Work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES P. RICHARDS

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress comes to a close it is well to take stock of its accomplishments. In the field of foreign affairs much has been done by the Congress to enable the United States to give those charged with the responsibility for the conduct of our foreign affairs the money, the authority, the flexibility, and the tools with which to make progress in the complicated field of international relations. In this legislative process the House Foreign Affairs Committee has played an important part.

I want to pay tribute to the hard-working, conscientious, and able members of the committee who worked tirelessly together in a true spirit of bipartisanship to enable the committee to complete one of the heaviest workloads in its long history. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and as one who is about to depart from this body into private life, I can only look back at my work on the committee with profound satisfaction. Above all, I can say without hesitation that without the hard work and wholehearted cooperation of each and every member of the committee, both on the majority and minority side, the great accomplishments of the committee would never have been achieved. I can truly say that the legislation which emerges from the House Foreign Affairs Committee is legislation which has been very carefully considered and very carefully drafted by the committee, with only one goal in mind, the security and the welfare of our Nation and of our people at a minimum cost to the taxpayer.

I also want to pay tribute to Boyd Crawford, the head of our committee staff, and to the others who have worked so well and faithfully under him—our staff consultants, Roy Bullock, Albert Westphal, and Sheldon Kaplan, and our staff assistants, June Nigh, Winifred Osborne, Helen Mattas, Myrtie Melvin, Helen Hashagen, and Louise O'Brien. They have earned and evoked my admiration and appreciation, as well as my personal friendship, by their consistent and sustained efforts on behalf of the committee. I do not believe there is another committee on Capitol Hill which has a better qualified staff. It has been the constant aim of the committee only to employ people who can deliver the goods. The long tenure of the staff is evidence that our high standards and care in selection have paid off in terms of efficiency and dependable service.

The work of the committee has grown by leaps and bounds. This is apparent from the comparison of funds involved in legislation considered. For example, during the 73d Congress the amount of money involved in public bills before the committee was $102,000, whereas the approximate total authorization considered by the committee, passed by the House, and enacted into law during the 84th Congress alone was $7,222,975,174.

The tremendous workload in the committee is readily obvious from a review of the following statistical record of committee activities during the 84th Congress:

Statistical record, Committee on Foreign Affairs, 84th Cong.

Number of consultative subcommittees	8
Number of special legislative subcommittees	7
Number of conference committees	4
Number of meetings of conference committees	5

Time spent in sessions:

By committee: Executive 193 hours, 25 minutes; open 92 hours, 5 minutes.

By subcommittees: Executive, 51 hours, 14 minutes; open, 41 hours, 50 minutes.

Total: 376 hours, 6 minutes.

One point I wish to emphasize is that the committee has been very much aware of the fact that foreign affairs legislation is a matter of deep concern to the American people and that the public is entitled to as much information as can be made available without impairing the security of our country. In this connection, the committee has made a special point of publishing transcripts of executive session meetings after deletion of testimony involving matters relating to national security. It has also been the chairman's practice after executive session meetings to give the press a digest of information received or action taken during the meeting, carefully omitting references involving matters affecting the national security.

Within the next few weeks a detailed survey of the committee's accomplishments and activities during the 84th Congress will be made available to the public in printed form. The idea of compiling a documented survey of the activities of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was conceived during the 1st session of the 81st Congress. At the close of each Congress since that time the committee has published a survey of its activities.

For the benefit of the Members of the House who may wish to have a ready reference at this time to the committee's activities, there follows a summary of the legislative measures on which the committee completed its action during this Congress:

Haiti Celebrates 153d Anniversary of Independence

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to send sincere greetings and best wishes to the Haitian people, President Paul E. Magloire, and His Excellency, Mauclair Zepherin, Ambassador of Haiti, on the occasion of the celebration of the 153d anniversary of the independence of Haiti, January 1, 1957.

Haiti, first of the Latin American nations to proclaim its freedom from colonial rule is the only Negro republic in the New World. Dissatisfaction with colonialism grew apace in America during the last years of the 18th and early years of the 19th centuries. St. Domingue was no exception, and on July 1, 1801, the great Haitian patriot Toussaint L'Ouverture declared the independence of the island from France. This independence was reaffirmed by Jean Jacques Dessalines on January 1, 1804, when the new republic was given the island's aboriginal name—Haiti—meaning land of mountains.

For a long time after separation from France, Haiti, like other countries of Latin America, suffered from political chaos. It is to the country's everlasting credit that, having so many obstacles to overcome, it has gone far on the road of self-development. Fundamentally, that road has been one of agricultural progress.

Agriculture is the basis of the nation's economy. There has been no lack of awareness of the problems of Haitian agriculture or of devotion to the cause of improving it. President Paul E. Magloire upon the assumption of office embarked upon a plan of economic development for Haiti the scope of which has never before been undertaken in the history of the country. The aim of the Magliore program is to ameliorate all economic life, but in Haiti this means basically agricultural development. Haiti envisages a series of economic measures of which the most important, actually in execution, is the development of irrigation and hydroelectric power in the Artibonite Valley. In addition, the program of economic development embraces measures for the promotion of increased production of the chief exportation crops, intensified production and cultivation of foodstuffs, irrigation, drainage and river control, conservation and reforestation, development of animal husbandry, and the establishment of demonstration and experiment farms. The government of President Magloire has seriously adapted itself to the fulfillment and implementation of this program, which if successful will accrue many benefits for Haiti.

The government has dedicated itself to resort to all available means to improve the health, security, and standard of living among the people at large without undue delay. The entire education system of the Republic reflects this objective.

There exists a close rapprochement between our country and Haiti. The Haitian Government has repeatedly declared its solidarity with the United States and the other republics of the Western Hemisphere. Haiti is no newcomer to the practice of genuine inter-American cooperation. Haitian soldiers fought at the battle of Savannah in the American Revolution. Haiti sent help to Simon Bolivar in his struggle for independence in South America. Haiti's valuable contributions to World War II and western hemispheric defense efforts are well known. Hence, in contributing her efforts to the common cause of democracy, Haiti is carrying out a well-established historical tradition for which other American nations are deeply grateful.

Haiti is made up of a great and proud people; it is an important democracy toward which we feel friendly and we believe its people feel friendly toward us. I trust that throughout the years this good feeling, this friendship, and this cooperation may abide.

Grain Prices in Retrospect

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OTTO KRUEGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KRUEGER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I would like the farmer and businessman to look back over the grain prices for the past 17-year period. The truth of the saying "Hindsight is better than foresight" is borne out. It is interesting to observe when and where the fluctuations occur. Of course, we all realize that available supply plays a part in the price level, as well as the market demand. Other factors enter in beyond the farmer's control; it may be the wind, the rain or the sun—too much or too little; insect or rust infestation. Here is where the Government's role comes in; that of a stabilizing factor.

Farm prosperity reflects on the other segments of our economy by a seven-times ratio. The Republican administration has realized its importance in relation to the general prosperity of our country, and to protect the farm economy in peacetime has devised and utilized various remedial measures; increased import restrictions; increased price supports; eased farm credit restrictions, including refinancing existing indebtedness on long-term real-estate loans through FHA; made available to farmers immediate soil-bank benefits—total number of acres presently enrolled is climbing past the 5 million-acre figure and still mounting—liberalized wheat subsidy exports. It is not resting here. It is also working out feasible means of developing new industrial uses for farm products.

With these stabilizing measures, and the $2 support price for wheat extended to the 1957 crop, I believe that farm prices will continue to rise. The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago reported that farm prices have risen steadily from the downward drift by 11 percent since last December. During this same period, farmers' operating costs rose only 3 percent. I was glad to see this price squeeze eased, and farm prices maintained at a 96 percent average in mid-June of this year, as compared to 80 percent of parity in December. Farm income right now is running about half a billion dollars higher than during the last half of 1955, and it is still on the upgrade. Prospects for a continuance of this steady rise look favorable.

After analyzing the following table of yearly average grain prices per bushel at Minneapolis from 1940 to 1956 inclusive, I believe you will come to the conclusion that your party, the Republican Party of peace, progress and prosperity is working toward achieving a genuine prosperity for the farmer and the Nation as a whole. It does not intend to let the farmer down. You can bank on it.

Let Us Stick to Facts—There Is No Spoils System in the Fish and Wildlife Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. A. L. MILLER
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin has had quite a bit to say about the spoils system ruining the Fish and Wildlife Service. Let us examine that closely.

In the first instance he says the top six jobs in the Service are all political appointments. Actually, there are only four class C—exempt—positions: the Director, Associate Director, Assistant Director for Wildlife, and Assistant Director for Field Operations. The two Assistants to the Director, GS–15, are not class C; they are both career appointments.

During the discussions on the floor of the House on July 24, the implication was left that the people who have been appointed to these jobs are "political hacks" with no experience in conservation and without qualifications for the jobs they hold. Nothing could be more inaccurate. Here are the facts.

John L. Farley, the Director, was for 6 years executive officer of the California Fish and Game Commission.

Associate Director Arnie J. Suomela, a graduate of the University of Washington in fisheries, joined the old Bureau of Fisheries back in 1931 and worked in it for 4 years until he went to the State of Oregon Fish Commission, of which he was executive secretary when he came to the Fish and Wildlife Service in 1953.

Incidentally, Milton James, who retired voluntarily in 1952 as Assistant Director for Fisheries, the position to which Mr. Suomela was appointed in 1953, recently was named to Mr. Suomela's old job in Oregon.

Robert H. Johnson, who holds the position of Assistant Director for Wildlife, was director of the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Game, when he was appointed, a post he had held 8 years.

Lester H. Bagley, Assistant Director for Field Operations in the Service, came to Washington from Wyoming where he had been director of the Wyoming Game and Fish Commission for 16 years.

Dr. O. Lloyd Meehean, who is Assistant to the Director for Technical Staff Services, one of the jobs implied to be occupied by a "political hack", has been a member of the staff of the Fish and Wildlife Service for 26 years and was Chief of the Branch of Game Fish and Hatcheries when he was promoted to his present position.

The other Assistant to the Director job in the list discussed by the gentleman from Wisconsin is occupied by Robert A. Wells who, before coming to Washington, had been for 9 years secretary of the New York State Conservation Department, which had an excellent reputation for a progressive conservation program in the administration of Perry B. Duryea. Mr. Duryea was the conservation commissioner who was succeeded by Governor Harriman's appointee, Louis A. Wehle, who resigned recently under fire after making ridiculous charges against civil-service wildlife employees in that department. Incidentally, Governor Harriman is a member of the party of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I might add that Mr. Wells received the Charles Banks Belt award in 1955 for the outstanding contribution to waterfowl restoration in the Atlantic Flyway as a result of the program which he developed in New York. That award was made by a committee of judges which included S. Dillon Ripley, curator of the Peabody Museum of Natural History, Yale University, New Haven, Conn., and Robert Cushman Murphy, formerly curator of the American Museum of Natural History.

Along these same lines, Assistant Director Johnson received the Springfield Daily News Trophy this year for outstanding achievement in New England conservation. The selection was made by the New England Outdoor Writers Association.

Every single one of these men have long professional records in the conservation field. They are anything but "political hacks."

Apparently, if you came into the Service with a Democratic chairman's approval, you are a conscientious public servant; and if you came in at the time of a Republican administration, you are a "political hack."

Now let us turn to the subject of oil leases. We get the impression from the remarks made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and some of his associates that oil leases were never issued before 1953 and that the present administration of the Department of the Interior is responsible for opening all wildlife lands to oil and gas operations. From the way the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin read, you are given the impression that only six oil leases were issued in the 20-year period prior to 1953. This, too, is completely inaccurate.

The wildlife lands involved are in three categories—wildlife refuges, game ranges, and cooperative lands. For all 3 groups there have been issued since 1920 to date a total of 612 leases. It may be of interest to the gentleman from Wisconsin to learn that prior to January 20, 1953, there were 277 of those leases issued. The bulk of all the leases were issued on the game ranges, principally Fort Peck. For wildlife refuges alone there have been 37 leases from 1920 to date. Of those 37 leases, 20 were issued prior to January 20, 1953. That certainly does not indicate that the Fish and Wildlife Service has taken a 180° turn, as the gentleman from Wisconsin stated.

The charge also has been made that the Fish and Wildlife Service has been winking at duck-baiting regulations. That, too, is completely untrue, as the facts on prosecutions clearly indicate. An examination of the record leaves you with the inescapable conclusion that, if the present Fish and Wildlife Service administration is winking at duck-baiting regulations, the previous one shut its eyes completely to them. The tabulations submitted to the gentleman from Wisconsin by the Fish and Wildlife Service for a 5-year period through 1953 showed an increasing number of cases in the past 3 years and none in 1951 and 1952 in the States involved.

When these facts were brought to his attention, the gentleman from Wisconsin then tried to emphasize that there were no prosecutions involving shooting of ducks more than 200 yards away from bait. In that respect I note that in his July 24 comments he said that—

> California duck-hunting clubs were given the green light and have been merrily shooting ducks from over bait from 200 yards to half a mile from the guns ever since.

I should like to know what kind of firearms they use in California to have a range like that. My duck-hunting friends boast forever when they reach out to get a bird 70 yards away.

This talk about 200 yards is just a smokescreen. Duck baiters actually shoot directly over or at least within shotgun range of the corn when they are taking ducks by this illicit method. That is where the birds are really vulnerable and where the baiters can get the most ducks. That's the real reason why baiting cases involve ranges of less than 200 yards.

I do not intend to discuss charges and countercharges involving Mr. Day which came up on the floor on July 24. I should like to suggest, however, that some of the gentlemen who have been so industriously engaged in whitewashing everything which happened in the Fish and Wildlife Service before 1953 and smearing everything which has happened since should check with the State fish and game administrators and learn what they privately think about previous Fish and Wildlife Service Administration's attitude and actions with respect to cooperative Federal-State effort to improve waterfowl management. Ask them if that administration willingly and freely cooperated in the States' efforts to get coordinators to make possible more efficient State and Federal action in flyway management programs and in developing improved regulations realistically based on waterfowl behavior patterns.

Practically all of these discussions, charges, and countercharges have involved waterfowl. For that reason and not as an intentional disregard of the other important phases of the work of the Fish and Wildlife Service I limit my next observation mostly to the waterfowl program alone. The present administration of the Fish and Wildlife Service is dedicated unequivocably to a cooperative Federal-State fish and game agency approach to the solution of the waterfowl problem. It believes that only by joint consultation and effort through flyway council organizations can the waterfowl management programs which are necessary be developed. This determination to work closely and continuously with the State conservation agencies is in sharp contrast with the record of the past. With respect to fisheries, I should like to add just this: Great advances in the fisheries conservation program have been made these past 3 years in both management and research. Everywhere you hear commendation for the Service's activities in this field.

Social Security Still Inadequate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. BENNETT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the social-security conference report which was approved by the Congress on yesterday. I noted for this bill when it passed the House of Representatives last year because it is a step in the right direction and does bring about some very badly needed improvements in this law—particularly in reference to the age reduction for women and the disability protection for workers aged 50 or over.

My own bill to amend the social-security law is still pending before the House Ways and Means Committee and would make the following improvements:

First, reduce the eligibility age for retirement benefits—now age 65 for everyone—to age 62 for men and age 60 for women.

Second, provide that widows who have been entitled to mother's benefits because there were young children in the home when the father died may become eligible for benefits in their own right at age 55, regardless of whether there are still children under 18 in the home. Under existing law, the benefits to such a widowed mother cease when the youngest child reaches age 18, and she must wait until she is 65 years of age before she is again entitled to a benefit.

Third, provide that workers aged 50 and over who are retired prematurely from their jobs by a disability which is so severe that they cannot work at any job shall be entitled to benefits on proof of such disability.

Fourth, provide substantial increases in benefits ranging from 33⅓ percent in the lower and middle brackets to 10 percent in the highest.

The greatest need under our social-security program today is a substantial increase in benefits. Present rates are completely inadequate and unrealistic in the light of living costs and economic conditions generally. It is deplorable that our retired people should be expected to live on a pension as low as $45 per month for man and wife.

I hope the House Ways and Means Committee will renew its study and commence hearings on this important subject immediately upon the adjournment of Congress so that the matter can be given further consideration next January.

Report to the People of Fourth Congressional District of Wisconsin—My Record and Votes on Major Issues in the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a policy which I have followed since first elected to the 81st Congress as a Member of the House of Representatives, I submit to the people of the Fourth District a report on the major legislative actions of the 84th Congress.

There is no doubt in my mind that my record will not please each and every individual in the Fourth District. Nevertheless, I want my constituency to know that I have followed the dictates of my conscience, and tried to represent our people to the best of my ability. The rest is a matter for their judgment.

THE 84TH CONGRESS

The Democrat-controlled 84th Congress—as the record shows—was a hard-working Congress. During the first session, which began on January 5, 1955, and ended August 2, 1955, the 84th Congress put more laws on the statute books than any other Congress in 5 years, and it had done so in less working days than any recent Congress.

During the second session, which lasted from January 3, 1956, to July 27, 1956, the record was equally imposing. The overall accomplishments of our national legislature during the last 2 years show a keen sense of responsibility and concern for the public welfare.

Even more important than the record 2,878 bills approved by this Congress is the quality of its conduct—and here, the 84th Congress ranks very high. We must note that President Eisenhower's prediction about a cold war of partisan politics—which he said would develop if the Democrats would win the control of the 84th Congress—never materialized. As a matter of fact, the President repeatedly received more support from the Democrats in Congress on issues affecting the security and well-being of our Nation than he did from the members of his own political party.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

It is a matter of record that the Democratic majorities in the 84th Congress have shown a consistent determination to keep our country militarily strong. They opposed the administration's moves to cut back our airpower, to reduce the strength of the Marine Corps, and to curtail our military buildup. The administration claimed that these economy moves would not hamper our military aircraft procurement, but the opposite happened. Aircraft purchases were cut back, a 2-year delay occurred in the Air Force buildup, and the production of B–52 jet bombers fell to alarming levels.

In the meantime, Communist displays in Moscow revealed that the Reds made unsuspected progress in the development and production of jet bombers and fighters, and in other military equipment. In comparison, our airpower and military development were falling behind.

Bearing these facts in mind, the 84th Congress increased the administration's request for Air Force funds by $1.1 billion, expanded research facilities in aeronautics, enlarged atomic energy projects, and increased funds for aircraft control and warning system. It also reorganized our military Reserves, forestalled Marine Corps manpower cuts, raised the officer strength of the Armed Forces by 60,000, and enacted a $1.4 billion naval construction program which included an atom-powered cruiser and a supercarrier.

INTERNAL SECURITY

While the Democrat-controlled 84th Congress was deeply aware of its responsibility for the safety of our Nation, it could not condone the many politically motivated frauds perpetrated by the administration in the name of internal security.

A thorough, 14-month study led a congressional committee to conclude that the administration "deliberately compiles figures which are basically dishonest" about its security programs.

The committee showed, for instance, that the list of persons allegedly fired as security risks was replete with duplications, dead people, employees who transferred to other Government agencies, workers who resigned because of illness or to take private jobs, and with other gross errors. As a case in point, the committee reported that 750 alleged security risks could not be identified at all by the Federal agencies which supposedly employed and fired them, and another 646 were actually rehired by the Government.

Through its security program "numbers game," the administration rendered serious injustice to thousands of loyal Government workers whose reputations have been besmirched for the sake of political expediency.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Great changes took place in the world during the last 2 years. Under the impact of the "spirit of Geneva," the trend toward neutralism became apparent in many countries located on the fringe of the Communist empire. Collective security arrangements, embodied in NATO, SEATO, the Balkan Alliance, the Baghdad Pact, and in other defense treaties, began to lose cohesion and strength. At the same time, dissension and conflict flared in North Africa and in the Near East.

The 84th Congress followed the President's recommendations by approving the continuation of the mutual-security program in 1955; by extending for 3 years the President's authority to enter into reciprocal trade agreements; by simplifying our customs laws; by approving various treaties, and in other ways. In this field, the Democratic support of President Eisenhower's recommendations consistently exceeded that which he received from his own party.

Unfortunately, these measures were insufficient to stem the apathy toward the Communist danger which was slowly spreading through the free world. New, dynamic programs are needed to meet the challenge of revised Communist tactics. The administration failed to provide this kind of leadership. Instead, it further confused our allies by contradictory positions on the subjects of neutrality, on colonialism, on trading with the Communists, and on other grave issues.

Disturbed by these developments, Congress sharply cut the 1956 mutual-security program funds, initiated a thorough review of our foreign policy, prohibited the administration from sending further military aid to Yugoslavia, and adopted a series of resolutions reaffirming its opposition to colonialism and to the admission of Red China to U. N.; supporting the right to self-determination of other peoples; urging that Spain be admitted to NATO; and stressing our determination to work for reunification of Germany, Korea, and Vietnam, and for the freedom and independence of the Communist-dominated nations.

GOOD GOVERNMENT

The 84th Congress adhered to the principle that good government requires fair treatment of Government employees. It increased the salaries of postal and other Federal employees to bring them more closely to the levels prevailing in the private sector of our economy, and liberalized retirement and various fringe benefits. Judicial, legislative, and executive salaries were also adjusted.

The administrative machinery of the Federal Government came under careful congressional scrutiny, and many improvements were put into effect. The authority of the President to submit reorganization plans was extended, and various recommendations of the Hoover Commission were implemented.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

The long-range, dynamic highway program approved by the 84th Congress will provide our growing Nation with a network of safe, modern highways. In the next 13 years, the Federal Government will finance 90 percent of the cost of the 41,000-mile Interstate Highway System, at the same time continuing the policy of aiding local and State authorities in the construction of Federal-aid highways outside of that system.

In the field of taxation, the 84th Congress repealed the so-called Humphrey blooper—a provision of the Republican tax law which meant at least a billion dollar windfall profit for corporations; revised the formula for taxing the incomes of insurance companies to yield higher revenues; and extended existing excise tax schedules and the 52 percent corporate income tax.

An earnest attempt was made to lessen the burden of the individual taxpayer by granting a $20 tax credit. Unfortunately, opposed strenuously by the administration which only 2 years earlier pressed for and received tax cuts totaling $7.2 billion, and primarily benefitting large corporations, high-income people, and special cases, the average man's tax bill failed to clear the Senate.

In furthering balanced economic growth of our Nation, the 84th Congress overrode the administration's opposition and raised the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 per hour; approved a 4-year program to stimulate airport construction; extended the life of the Small Business Administration and increased the revolving fund for loans to small business; strengthened our antimonopoly law and passed a law to curb the influence of large bank-holding companies.

SOCIAL SECURITY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

One of the most dramatic achievements of the 84th Congress was the enactment of new social-security amendments. These amendments contain the principles which I introduced and sponsored as early as 1953. They reduce the retirement age for women to age 62, and provide benefits to totally and permanently disabled workers at age 50. In addition, coverage was extended to 250,000 self-employed, professional people, and substantial improvements were made in programs aiding dependent children, the blind, the old, and the infirm.

The 84th Congress also enacted improved housing laws, providing special aid in this respect to our elderly citizens; approved dynamic, farsighted programs for medical and dental research, for the training of public health personnel, and for hospital construction; and passed several laws which are specifically designed to benefit our youth.

SERVICEMEN AND VETERANS

In an effort to make our Military Establishment as effective as possible, and to remove certain inequities, Congress enacted a law to give our Nation a reserve manpower pool of 2.9 million by 1959; provided incentive pay increases for members of our Armed Forces; liberalized retirement benefits and social-security credits; overhauled the entire structure of survivors' benefits; extended medical care to military dependents, and granted educational assistance to children of World War II and Korean war veterans whose deaths were service-connected.

The veterans in the Milwaukee area should be particularly pleased that steps were taken this year to provide a new Veterans' Administration hospital at Wood, Wis., a project which I sponsored and for which I have been working for 4 years. The preparation of plans for the 1,250-bed, $35 million hospital will begin in the near future.

The space limitations of this report will not permit me to describe in detail the several other measures which will benefit our veterans and servicemen. A summary of veterans legislation which was acted upon by the 84th Congress is available upon request.

AGRICULTURE AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Under the Eisenhower administration, farm operators' net income declined about 30 percent. The depressed conditions in the agricultural segment of our economy began to affect our cities: sales of agricultural implements and of other industrial goods dropped sharply, and employment decreased in those industries.

The Agricultural Act of 1956 and other measures approved by Congress are intended to put our agriculture back on its feet, and to correct the sharp disparity in incomes which prevailed during the last few years.

The 84th Congress also took steps to prevent further raids on our natural resources—such as the Al Sarena Mine case, the sellout at Hells Canyon and at Niagara, the tidelands oil grab, and the raids on our timber resources and on the national grazing lands. It strengthened older statutes and provided new laws aimed at the preservation of our national heritage for future generations.

Saudi Arabia Celebrates King Saud's 24th Anniversary of Accession to the Throne, November 12, 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADAM C. POWELL, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, when I came back from the Bandung Conference I announced that I would address the United States Congress each time there was an anniversary of one of the 29 participating nations in the Asian-African Conference on friendly relations with the United States.

Inasmuch as the Congress will not be in session at the time of the event, I wish to take this opportunity to extend felicitations to the people of Saudi Arabia, His Majesty Abdul Aziz Ibn Abdur Rahman al Faisal al Saud, and His Excellency Sheikh Abdullah Al-Khayyal, Ambassador of Saudi Arabia, upon the occasion of the celebration of the 24th anniversary of His Majesty King Saud's accession to the throne of Saudi Arabia, November 12, 1956.

The herculean efforts of King Ibn Saud to weld his country into an independent entity and break the bonds of the post-World War I mandate system are too well known to warrant detailed recounting here. Perhaps nowhere else in the annals of modern history could be found a state which owed more of its existence to the efforts of a single man. It suffices to say that King Saud's valiant struggles to regain for his family its lost authority and past glory began many years before he acceded to the throne of his country. Despite numerous obstacles created by man and nature which confronted him, nullifying his initial successes, King Saud forged ahead, achieving remarkable victories over the enemies of his people. Personal courage, faith, and determination undergirded the young prince for his tasks. Indeed the determination of King Saud to carry on many of his early encounters singlehanded in the face of numerous odds was the source of grave concern to his family and faithful friends.

With the advent of the First World War King Saud's plans for independence of his country suffered a setback. Upon the termination of the war, the Arab countries which revolted against colonialism, and which were promised their independence by the Allies, were placed instead under the mandate system of the League of Nations.

In 1924 the forces of King Ibn Saud captured Taif and Mecca followed the next year by similar victories over Medina and Jedda. In January 1926, King Saud was proclaimed King of the Hejaz. When Nejd was proclaimed a Kingdom in 1927, His Majesty's title became King of the Hejaz and of Nejd and its dependencies. In September 1932, King Ibn Saud proclaimed the union of the Hejaz and Nejd into the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia with himself as monarch.

During the early years of World War II Saudi Arabia remained neutral. Its contribution to the war effort is described in the citation of the Legion of Merit, Degree of Chief Commander, presented in 1947 to King Ibn Saud by President Truman. The citation reads in part:

> His Majesty Abdul Aziz Ibn Abdur Rahman al Faisal al Saud, King of Saudi Arabia, rendered exceptionally meritorious service to the war effort of the United Nations. He led his country in an unwavering course of support and encouragement to the cause of the Allies * * * As Commander in Chief of Saudi Arabia he kept the land, sea and air routes under his control open for use, and by his attitude of wholehearted cooperation, he enable American forces to accomplish a program of construction and resource development in the country that derived benefits of major proportions for the prosecution of the war. Through his unswerving loyalty, and his dynamic leadership at the head of his nation in the support of the cause, King Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud made a notable contribution to the successful war effort of the United Nations.

Saudi Arabia is a member of the United Nations, having sent a delegation to the San Francisco Conference in 1945 when it was a signatory of the United Nations Charter. It is also a member of many specialized agencies of the United Nations.

In describing King Ibn Saud, H. C. Armstrong wrote in his Lord of Arabia:

> Ibn Saud is Lord of Arabia ruling by force of his personality and the strength of his own right arm. An immense man, tremendous, vital, dominant. A giant thrown up out of the chaos and agony of the desert—to rule.

The success which King Ibn Saud has achieved through his efforts and with the minimum of external support have gained for him universal esteem and affection of Arabs. No more outstanding figure has appeared in the Arab world for many years. We trust that his bigness in his own country will be expanded; that his conscience and regard for the prestige of Saudi Arabia in the free world will lead to an expression of that same greatness in all relations with all people; that nothing be permitted to cast a shadow over a shiny career.

Loyalty Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES C. DAVIS
OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, May 1 is a day customarily set aside by the Communists to celebrate and glorify the expansion of the Communist ideology. It is a day to sing praises to its depraved principles and to pay tribute to its barbaric aim of world conquest.

On the eve of this infamous spectacle, the Veterans of Foreign Wars in my home State of Georgia observed Loyalty Day. Annually the Veterans of Foreign Wars stage these patriotic ceremonies as a brief reminder of the matchless blessings enjoyed by everyone in our land of freedom and liberty.

There are many fine patriotic celebrations each year in our country, but only VFW Loyalty Day is dedicated specifically to the reaffirmation of faith and belief in our Flag and to the Constitution.

VFW Loyalty Day was conceived in a fighting spirit. It was originated as a weapon to combat the sinister effects of Communist-celebrated May Day and to arm our citizens against the penetration of Communist propaganda.

In Georgia, VFW Loyalty Day was directed by State Commander Randolph Medlock of Stone Mountain and State Loyalty Day Chairman Charles A. Moran of Atlanta. Under the inspirational leadership of these two patriotic Americans, many fine programs were sponsored by VFW posts throughout the State.

At the VFW Georgia Department encampment last month, Chairman Moran summed up Loyalty Day with these words: "Loyalty Day contributes to a great campaign of truth by informing our people and urging them to rekindle that flame of love for God and country which awakens them from apathy and indifference."

The world was slow to recognize the menace of communism. Freedom-loving people of every nation for many years were unprepared to believe the horrors which communism held for the millions living under its scorn. With the high sense of morality associated with Christianity, we could not conceive of the criminal character and the pagan conscience of this heathen philosophy.

At last the world has come to recognize the evils inherent in this ungodly ideology which enslaves the mind and molds the body as serfs of the all-powerful state.

The observance of Loyalty Day stands like a sentry over our freedom and reminds us that our heritage, like all things precious, must be eternally defended.

It was an honor for me to serve as honorary vice chairman of the Georgia Loyalty Day Committee. The Veterans of Foreign Wars have made, and are continuing to make, real and significant contributions to the vital cause of loyalty through the annual observance of Loyalty Day.

Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce Activity Report for 2d Session, 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OREN HARRIS
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, Public Law 601, 79th Congress, and House Resolution 105, 84th Congress, I should like to submit a statement of the activity of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the 84th Congress, 2d session.

The activity report for the first session of this Congress was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2, 1955, at page 13178. A more detailed report, combining both sessions, will be filed later.

Among the important measures cleared by the committee during the second session were the following items of legislation:

On the subject of health, the committee promptly reported a bill to extend the Polio Vaccination Assistance Act of 1955 through June 30, 1957, which became law. The committee also took action on bills authorizing mental health study grants, a national health survey, increasing authorization for construction at National Institute of Dental Research, health research facilities, increasing the number of specially trained professional nurses and of practical nurses and professional public-health personnel, extension for 2 years of the hospital and medical facilities survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act, and establishing a national library of medicine.

In connection with its study of the Salk polio vaccine, the committee visited the Eli Lilly & Co. laboratories and acquired much valuable information about the problems involved in the production of the vaccine.

Legislation was enacted, amending the Railroad Retirement Act, to provide, generally, for a 10-percent increase in benefits to a large number of beneficiaries under that act.

On the subject of aviation, the committee reported legislation making it possible for airlines operating in Hawaii and Alaska to obtain permanent certificates; to prohibit serving alcoholic beverages on airlines; to permit reduced-rate air transportation to ministers of religion; extension of aviation war risk insurance; extension for 5 years of Prototype Aircraft Act; to punish sabotage of aircraft; and to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 relating to capital gains of air carriers.

Following the tragic airplane accident over the Grand Canyon, a special subcommittee was appointed to investigate immediately the problems of airspace use, including air traffic regulations and control, in an effort to find ways to avoid recurrence of such air disasters. The subcommittee immediately held hearings in Las Vegas and visited the scene of the accident.

In the field of transportation, the committee held extensive hearings on the legislative recommendations of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Transport Policy and Organization. It reported out a bill to improve the transportation system in the District of Columbia and its environs, which became law. The so-called trip leasing bill was enacted. A bill to amend section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act to prohibit common carriers by railroad, motor vehicle, water, or freight forwarders from granting reduced rates—that is, less than published tariff rates—for the transportation of Government property or personnel, except in certain minor respects, was reported to the House. Also reported, was a bill designed to change requirements for obtaining freight forwarder permits. Bills to grant reduced fares for disabled persons requiring an attendant and to regulate transportation of migrant farm workers were reported favorably.

Under authority of House Resolution 357, a special subcommittee was appointed to study traffic safety, which has already made plans for an extensive study of this problem.

The committee reported legislation to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act with regard to attorney fees and disposal of World War I assets; and to amend the War Claims Act relative to claims of certain religious organizations in the Philippines, and determination of date of death of certain prisoners of war.

In the field of securities, extensive hearings were held on promotional securities, and legislation was reported to establish liability of officers and other persons making false statements under subsection 3 (b) of the Securities Act of 1933.

A report was filed on newsprint, reflecting the newsprint outlook for 1956, House Report 1953.

The detailed activity report follows:

Pharmacists in the Armed Services

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. HENDERSON

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, for many months past I have served as a member of the Subcommittee on Manpower of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. This subcommittee has continued the work of a predecessor subcommittee in the 83d Congress to assist in the prevention of duplicated effort and to work toward the most effective and economical utilization of manpower in the Federal Government. I believe the subcommittee has rendered an excellent service to the Nation.

My comments at this time, however, are directed to use of manpower in the Armed Forces rather than toward civilian personnel.

The armed services must constantly guard against the shortsighted practices in the assignment of personnel. We all know that the use of manpower in our military services is of vital importance to their operating efficiency in the defense of our Nation. I am concerned that the classification of personnel for military duties often leaves much to be desired.

For the past year, I have been particularly concerned with the policies relating to the assignment of servicemen who are registered civilian pharmacists and have made some initial investigation of this question. It is learned that in many cases men who are registered pharmacists serve in other capacities while untrained men are given special training at Government expense upon their entry into the service to assume duties in military pharmacies. I have received letters from constituents bringing this to my attention.

Last year, when I took up this question with the Army, I received the following reply which read in part concerning first, the commissioning of pharmacists and secondly, of the assignment of registered pharmacists as enlisted men:

Recent reductions in the overall strength of the Army have necessitated the suspension of our program of appointing and calling to active duty pharmacists and other individuals who meet the criteria for appointment in the Pharmacy, Supply and Administration Section, of the Medical Service Corps, for fiscal year 1956. In view of the fact that the Medical Service Corps is at the present time approximately 16 percent overstrength, it is not anticipated that vacancies will occur in the very near future.

The enlisted military occupational specialty job description for pharmacy specialists (932) is below the level of the registered pharmacist, and during periods when personnel are not being inducted into the Army, positions classified in this specialty would be filled primarily by service school-trained enlisted personnel with no professional training and experience prior to entry into military service. Because of the large numbers of registered pharmacists who have been inducted, no service school training has been conducted in this enlisted specialty since May 1953. Vacancies through attrition have been filled to the maximum extent possible by inducted registered pharmacists. No attempt was made, however, to eliminate career enlisted specialists already trained and being utilized in the field. It is estimated that 25 percent of the present enlisted strength in military occupational speciality 932 falls in this category. Many enlisted registered pharmacists for whom pharmacy vacancies did not exist have been effectively utilized, during their period of obligated service, after short periods of on-the-job training, in allied enlisted specialists such as medical laboratory and medical aid man.

I have now received the following letter from the Ohio State Pharmaceutical Association informing me of a practice within the Air Force which seems very questionable indeed. The letter is as follows:

OHIO STATE PHARMACEUTICAL ASSOCIATION,
Columbus, Ohio.

Congressman JOHN E. HENDERSON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

The past few weeks, Congressman HENDERSON, there have been news stories concerning the need for increased appropriations for the Air Force, and lots of debate back and forth about the justification for the additional appropriations.

At the present time, only a fraction of the pharmacists entering our Armed Forces are given the opportunity to practice pharmacy while serving the term for which they were either drafted or enlisted. Most of them, from reports which regularly come to my desk end up as first-aid men, ambulance drivers, lab assistants, or any one of the myriad of duties related to one degree or another to the medical field.

In our appearances before the various student bodies of Ohio's four colleges of pharmacy we have been rather successful in convincing these pharmacists and pharmacists to be there will be enough pharmacy vacancies to permit each pharmacist to serve in his profession while in the Armed Services.

However, I'm through trying to defend the Armed Forces against the treatment about which these young pharmacists complain. Here's the reason why.

This past week I received a copy of the apprentice pharmacy specialist curriculum prepared for and being used by the United States Air Force School of Aviation Medicine, Gunter Air Force Base, Ala. On page 1, the text outline says, "This course is 18 weeks * * *and 702 curriculum hours. Two of these weeks are devoted to basic medical subjects such as first aid, anatomy, physiology, and preventive medicine."

It goes on to outline the apprentice pharmacist specialist course objectives as follows: "To train students to operate an Air Force pharmacy; to perform the administrative duties necessary for the operation of an Air Force pharmacy; to compound and dispense drugs; to utilize the drugs, chemicals, and biologicals in the Federal Catalog of Medical Material."

Students at Ohio's four colleges of pharmacy spend many times the 702 hours required to complete this course in qualifying for their pharmacy degrees. In addition, they spend 1 year's apprenticeship in a retail or hospital pharmacy, against several times the number of hours necessary to pass the Gunter course.

The young men entering our Armed Forces, Congressman HENDERSON, are entitled to the same high grade of health care they can obtain as civilians. Their lives should not be risked at the hands of untrained apprentice pharmacist specialists whose training does not deserve to be mentioned in the same breath as university graduate registered pharmacist.

The Air Force, if top brass so desires, can eliminate this waste of already-learned skills and money by simply abolishing the Gunter apprentice pharmacist school and utilizing the training of pharmacists who already know their profession and who are eager to practice it while required to serve in the Armed Forces. This whole situation appears to be a gross mismanagement of the use of available manpower by the United States Air Force.

What actions can you take, Congressman HENDERSON, to see that young men and women in our Armed Forces, and the Air Force in particular, get the same high standards of pharmacy treatment as they get as civilians?

Cordially yours,

JAMES H. MERRITT,
Executive Secretary.

World Communism and Latin America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HALE BOGGS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, recent months have seen farflung and well-publicized efforts of the part of the U. S. S. R. to extend her influence throughout the world on the diplomatic and economic fronts. These efforts have not overlooked Latin America.

The Communists have added fuel to the Middle Eastern caldron by supplying important military assistance to Egypt, hoping to undermine the Anglo-American position in key Arab countries and to bring those countries under their own sphere of influence. Increasing emphasis in Asia on the part of the Soviets has been highlighted by the wandering tourists—Khrushchev and Bulganin—in India and Burma, well documented in the world press. New attention to Africa is notable in, among other things, economic overtures to Liberia and propaganda support of the Mau Mau terrorists in Kenya.

Meanwhile, as Russian armaments reach new heights, the peace offensive in the Western World is renewed by Premier Bulganin, seeking to recapture the shattered Geneva spirit. Although Bulganin's letter to President Eisenhower requesting an American-Soviet treaty of friendship has been firmly turned down by the President in a note of reasonable moderation, the Soviet Premier's overtures, renewed in a second letter to the President, remain a kingpin in Communist peace propaganda.

I

Soviet desires to give this peace offensive the appearance of universality have naturally led to the inclusion of the Latin American Republics in its scope, although this phase of the overall effort seems to have been somewhat overlooked by Western commentators. The public kickoff for the Latin American offensive took place on January 16 in a Moscow press conference conveying the written answers of Premier Bulganin to a series of questions put by the New York-published Spanish-language magazine, Vision. Premier Bulganin extended the prospect of full diplomatic relations with all the Latin American Republics and dangled the bait of extensive foreign-trade possibilities between the Soviet Union and Latin America.

In offering diplomatic relations to those Latin American countries with which such relations do not presently exist, Premier Bulganin promised certain benefits which he said had been obtained from uninterrupted diplomatic relations with Argentia, Mexico, and Uruguay. These benefits were alleged to include cooperation between those three states and the U. S. S. R. for maintaining and strengthening peace, and the stimulation of economic, cultural, and other relations. As an attraction to Latin American States not maintaining diplomatic relations with the U. S. S. R., Premier Bulganin ascribed to the existence of such relations between the U. S. S. R. and Argentina "the reason for the substantial increase in trade" between those two states.

In the economic sphere, the Premier assured Latin America that "the U. S. S. R. would be able to export to the Latin American countries various types of industrial equipment and machinery, including equipment for the petroleum industry, complete production equipment, complete sets, and all types of machine tools, automobiles, and agricultural machinery." The offer of technical personnel was extended, with the U. S. S. R. eager to share her experience in the field of industry, electrical energy, construction, transportation, and agriculture. Other items were offered by the U. S. S. R.: wood products, cellulose, and paper goods; petroleum and petroleum derivatives; sheet metal; cement; asbestos; dyes; chemical, and other products.

In exchange, the U. S. S. R. would "be able to import from Latin America agricultural products, livestock, and mining products."

These Kremlin overtures to the Central and South American Republics suggest the need for an appraisal of the major roles of the Soviet Union and her satellites among those Republics at the present time. Only from such an examination can there be projected a sober evaluation of potentialities inherent in that phase of the "peace offensive" aimed at Latin America.

II

Any effort to measure the degree and kind of Communist activity in a given area runs immediately into the fact that the tactics of international communism make it extraordinarily difficult, if not impossible, totally to dissect "direct" operations of the Soviet Union or her satellites in the official sense from those operations which are carried on by local Communist parties or front organizations. The efforts of each type are commonly the product of a centrally defined and directed "line," dedicated to the single purpose of the fulfillment of the designs of the Soviet Union.

Thus, wherever international communism functions, its operations in propaganda, in economic and cultural fields, as well as in more sinisterly subversive areas, are all a part of a common scheme. These operations are carried on by a variety of organizations, official and unofficial, which may give the appearance of separateness. But official agencies of Communist bloc governments and unofficial local Communist parties and "front" organizations are meshing parts of a machine functioning for the same purpose.

A general demonstration of this theme is provided by the attached chart of major types of Communist activity in the Latin American Republics. By and large, where one kind of activity exists, other types likewise exist. Note, for example, that in Argentina, there are virtually complete Communist bloc diplomatic representation, an active local Communist Party, trade agreements with six Communist states, a large number of "friendship societies," and front organization activity. With respect to the other Republics, it is generally true that if one form of Communist activity exists, there is at the same time one or more other sort of operation.

What is being suggested here is not that any one Latin American Republic is about to become Communist dominated but that there is a clear pattern for the mode of Communist penetration. Further, that pattern is the result of a combination of activities on the part of official representatives of Communist states and at the same time of local parties and front organizations.

However, it should not be assumed that an easy response to the Communist threat lies in the simple denial, for example, of diplomatic relations, or in the banning of a local Communist Party. The whole apparatus of penetration is geared to the exploitation of national problems in the Latin American Republics and seeks to manipulate those problems in such a fashion as to gain local support for some phase of Russian policy. The very real economic problems of the underdeveloped Latin American states, with their domestic and international implications, offer a fertile field for Soviet-directed activity. Historical fears of the "Colossus of the North" can be reawakened, and new feelings of national consciousness on the part of the Latin American states can be turned to the benefit of the Soviet Union.

A sensible appraisal, then, of Communist activities in Latin America must include an understanding of the tactics of penetration, but must never lose sight of the underlying problems which supply opportunity to the Communists. Efforts to combat such Communist works simply by countering or blocking them on the tactical level offer no permanent solutions.

III

The ground which the U. S. S. R. must cover to make any headway in the diplomatic field is sharply delineated by the limited number of Latin American countries in which the U. S. S. R. and Communist bloc states now maintain diplomatic missions. The U. S. S. R. itself now maintains such missions in only three Latin American countries: Argentina, Mexico, and Uruguay. Five other Communist bloc nations are represented by 12 diplomatic missions in 6 Latin American Republics: Argentina, Mexico, and Uruguay, plus Bolivia, Brazil, and Ecuador. Czechoslovakia is responsible for 6 of these 12 satellite missions, Poland for 3 of them, with Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria supplying 1 each. In short, neither the Soviet Union nor her satellite states are represented in 14 Latin American Republics by diplomatic missions.

Further in the way of obstacles to a successful diplomatic offensive, the 20 Latin American Republics are associated with the United States in the Organization of American States, a regional grouping for the betterment and the security of the Western Hemisphere. Within this organization, mutual understanding and respect among the 21 American Republics develops as the representatives of each of the republics work jointly in economic affairs, defense questions, health problems, and other activities of common concern. Backstopping hemisphere security is the Rio pact which clearly warns that any attack on an American state will be considered an attack on all the Americas. Beyond that, 16 of the 21 American Republics have given positive support to the Caracas resolution of March 1954, which puts domination by international communism of the political institution of any American state in the same category as military attack upon any state as "a threat to the sovereignty and political independence of the American states, endangering the peace of America." The pattern, then, for a strong bulwark against the blandishments of communism exists; the degree to which this pattern is filled with actions based on mutual decision and common needs will determine its continuous effectiveness.

Similarly, it is impossible to ignore, in considering the impact of the new Soviet overtures, that the U. S. S. R. and international communism received a major setback in the Western Hemisphere when the openly pro-Communist Arbenz regime in Guatemala was overthrown by the present anti-Communist Castillo Armas government in early summer, 1954.

The limited degree of Soviet and satellite diplomatic relations in Latin America has been noted. It should further be noted that local Communist Parties are outlawed in 15 of the Latin American Republics. The widespread degree of the outlawry of the Communist Party poses, of course, an additional difficulty in any efforts of the Communist bloc to gain diplomatic representation or recognition.

However, although the Communist Party of Brazil has been illegal since 1947, it remains in existence as the presumed largest Communist Party in South America. In other republics, driving the Communist Party as such underground has resulted in Communist efforts to infiltrate existing legal political parties or to form new parties under new labels. For example, Communist Party support was probably accorded the winning Kubitschek-Goulart ticket in the recent Brazilian presidential election. Local Communist Party desires for respectability and legality in their respective states leads them, among other things, to press for Soviet and satellite diplomatic representation and recognition. Local pressures for recognition of the U. S. S. R. seem strongest in Brazil and Chile.

Currently it is reported that no directly specific Soviet efforts to expand diplomatic representation in countries beyond the three republics wherein such missions are maintained are observable. Some overtures to Ecuador may have been made during a recent tourist visit to that country of the U. S. S. R. Ambassador to Mexico. Most analyses, however, of the Bulganin diplomatic overtures seem to suggest that the U. S. S. R. was seeking to inspire initiative for recognition from the Latin American States themselves. Note Bulganin's strong emphasis that Argentina had profited heavily from increased economic relations with the Soviet Union as one of the results of Argentine-Soviet diplomatic intercourse. The effort to inspire Latin American requests for diplomatic relations is hardly a subtle one.

IV

Beyond the normal diplomatic and commercial activities of recognized embassies, Soviet and satellite missions are the centers of other types of activity—a rule to which Latin America is no exception. The totalitarian Soviet Union does not hesitate to use all its instrumentalities for the pursuit of a total foreign policy, regardless of the inhibitions of regular diplomatic usage. Revelations made, for random examples, from the Canadian spy inquiry and the more recent ones in Australia have certainly made clear the fact that the Soviet Union considers direction of basic espionage a regular activity of their diplomatic missions. The degree to which such activities take place is not a matter, however, of thorough public documentation; and the degree of success of such activities varies with the level of security service scrutiny on the part of the nation wherein a given Soviet embassy lies. It should be noted that the numbers of personnel at Soviet and satellite missions in Latin America, particularly military attachés, are reported to have been increased in recent months.

In the pursuance of a total foreign policy, Soviet missions likewise may operate as communication links between local Communist parties and the Kremlin, from which new directives as to the currently correct party line may emerge. One of the sources of tactical as well as strategical coordination of local Communist Party and front activities with the overall purposes of the U. S. S. R. is frequently a Soviet or satellite embassy.

V

Currently the Communists have stepped up in Latin America all phases of their propaganda offensive. These propaganda efforts in Latin America are noteworthy in their strategy because they reflect the effort to apply a "new" line in an area where communism has been basically weak and in an area where at the same time a terrific economic potential remains essentially undeveloped. Indeed, the Communist strategy in Latin America is worth studying not only for its impact on Latin America but also as an example of how the Communists hope to woo the so-called underdeveloped areas. Much of this approach parallels the Communists' effort in China, for which reason alone its impact should not be underestimated.

The "line" in Latin America does not at the present time take the form of an outright bid for political power for Communist parties as the Latin American phase of world revolution and domination. Rather, the Communists present themselves in the South American Republics as truly concerned with the national interest of each Republic, as truly "patriots" interested in forming broad coalitions against "foreign" imperialistic domination. Thus the Communists' attempt to capitalize on two existing facts of political life in Latin America: Strongly awakened nationalism and the not so latent historical antipathy to the Colossus of the North. The United States is presented as aggressively dominating the Latin American area, economically, politically, culturally, militarily, to the detriment of the rightful aspirations and normal development of the Republics of that area. The Communists then hope for the creation in the politics of the Latin American States of broad coalitions of political power, nationalistic in nature, anti-United States, and sympathetic to the Soviet Union.

For the current period, then, communism is seeking to move closer to political domination in Latin America through a kind of "back door," wherein its naked desires for control are cloaked in the guise of nationalism and economic well-being. As a consequence of the effort to build up "National Democratic Front" governments, the Communists are willing to work through political groups and economic classes which they once publicly denounced. Current propaganda in Latin America does not avow the revolution of the proletariat and the overthrow of the existing economic order. Rather, the Communists emphasize the "common interests" of workers, of the middle class, of intellectuals, of those capitalists who have not "sold out to Yankee imperialism," of small farmers, and so forth. These "common interests" which cross traditional class lines are portrayed as involving at root the combating of the American domination which is held to be the cause of economic illness and instability in Latin America.

The efforts to create this kind of "National Democratic Front" have involved some interesting switches in Communist tactics. In Brazil, the Communist Party supported a presidential candidate it had previously denounced. In Argentina, the Communists are avidly courting the support of those elements of organized labor which had been the main reliance of ex-dictator Perón. Indeed, the new line has seen quite a few groups and persons formerly called Fascist become favorites of Communist propaganda efforts.

VI

This strategy of capitalizing on nationalism, anti-Americanism, and economic instability is carried on tactically in a variety of ways. Front organizations carry on many of the overt activities of the Communists in Latin America. Various movements for peace are active in the Communist campaign in Latin America, particularly in Argentina, Brazil, and Mexico. The themes stated above are angled in the peace movements to demonstrate the warlike intentions of the United States for world domination. The United States is portrayed as the aggressor in the pursuit of its own imperialistic economic interests, interests described of course, as directly contrary to the best development of the national economies of Latin America. Efforts are constantly under way to increase the degree of Communist penetration of labor unions and the amount of Communist support in organizations of farm workers and intellectuals.

Thirty binational centers, maintaining close ties with the Soviet and satellite diplomatic missions in the area, are focal points for general propaganda. These hyphenated national societies, Argentine-U. S. S. R. Cultural Relations Institute—IRCAU—for example, are maintained in six Latin American Republics, with their distribution indicated on the chart attached to this paper. The centers promote cultural exchange, display Communist films, translate and distribute Communist publications, and serve as the transmission point for speeches advancing the "National Democratic Front" idea. Nineteen hundred and fifty-five was a year of tremendous expansion of such activities in Argentina, with 500 representatives of Argentine official and cultural circles attending the inaugural ceremonies of new offices of the IRCAU in Buenos Aires. Then President Perón was represented by a personal telegram of good wishes for the success of the institute.

Various types of published material are used as vehicles for Communist propaganda. Spanish translations of Soviet books are available in large numbers in Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, and other Latin American countries; it is reported that the U. S. S. R. Spanish translation program was up to 63 titles last year, compared to 28 in 1953. Various foreign published Communist journals circulate in Latin America, carrying over recent months far more material aimed at that area. In 1955 25 articles in the Cominform Journal were devoted to Brazil alone. Additional types of propaganda pamphlets and booklets in a variety of languages were distributed in great numbers, including some aimed at children. Soviet and satellite films are used as a major part of the propaganda effort.

Local Communist sources maintain around 80 newspapers and magazines in Latin America, with a particularly significant emphasis and success in Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, and Argentina.

Although little headway has been made in local radio and TV in Latin America by the Communist propagandists, Soviet and satellite radio aims over 50 hours per week of broadcasting to the area, an increase during the last year of around 167 percent. It should be noted, comparatively, that USIA beams around 12 hours of broadcasting to Latin America per week from the United States.

The exchange of cultural, sports, and economic delegations is another major area of Soviet propaganda activity. From such exchanges and sponsored visits, the Soviet hope to reap the reward of sympathetic travelogues and articles written by those returning from behind the Iron Curtain. A limited success has been achieved.

VII

The trade policy of the U. S. S. R. and her satellites springs from a rigidly planned and controlled economy. Soviet foreign trade does not result from the interdependence of the Soviet economy with the economies of the free world. The primary purpose of foreign trade for the Soviet Union may reasonably be assumed to be that of serving as a complementary and important phase of the overall world political purposes of the Soviet Union. Thus Soviet foreign trade policy may be specifically tailored to meet the demands of the immediate strategy and tactics of international communism. Russian and satellite efforts to increase trade with Latin America are properly viewed from that perspective.

Latin America as a nonindustrial area wherein a vast economic potential remains yet fully to be developed presents some very pressing economic problems. With the basic exportable items of Latin America agricultural commodities, petroleum, and metal ores, there is often a difficulty in marketing these products in those countries of the Western World which are able to supply Latin America with needed finished products in return. This problem is enhanced by the fact that individual Latin American republics are frequently heavy producers of one major commodity upon which their foreign trade relies. Thus, for Cuba, sugar; for Brazil and Colombia, coffee; for Chile, metal ores; and for Bolivia, metal ores are the dominant exportable items. When demand for these products is limited in the countries normally supplying Latin America with finished goods, large unexportable surpluses develop in specific Latin American states which immediately depress the economy of those states.

The trade of the United States with Latin America runs considerably over $3 billion per year in each direction. Balance of United States imports with United States exports is relatively even, but with discrepancies in the case of individual countries. Frequently, of course, exportable Latin American items run into surpluses in the American domestic market, or a particular price situation, as in the case of coffee, temporarily shrinks the American consumption market. When this happens, there is a tendency in the affected Latin American nation to blame the United States, the big customer, for the resulting weakening effects on the domestic economy of that Latin American nation.

It is in this sort of situation that the Soviet Union's trade policy can be manipulated to create an attractive appeal, and that we can best understand the nature of the current economic offensive in Latin America. Trade policy becomes the material partner of the propaganda offensive described above; indeed, it is reasonable to view the kind of trade policy the Soviet Union is pursuing in Latin America now as part and parcel of the overall propaganda strategy. To nations with unexportable surpluses creating domestic economic and political unrest, the Soviet Union appears in the guise of the savior, prepared to accept surpluses of an agricultural or mineral commodity in exchange for capital goods badly needed by the Latin American States, or in exchange for dollars. An alternative is offered to "Yankee domination"; this is the economic side of the appeal of the new line to nationalism and anti-United States feelings.

Efforts to use trade in this politically motivated fashion are on the increase on the part of the U. S. S. R. and her satellites since the Bulganin overtures of last January. Reference to the chart attached to this paper will indicate those countries maintaining formal trade agreements with the U. S. S. R. and her allied states. Note the heavy emphasis on Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay. In addition, however, the Communist-bloc states are capable of "single shot" trade arrangements, an example being the purchase last year of some 700,000 tons of Cuban sugar which helped alleviate the tremendous surplus of that commodity in Cuba.

Existing trade agreements between Soviet bloc countries and Latin American countries sought a trade level of $500 million for 1955, a goal double the 1954 trade level between the two areas, and nearly 3 times the level between the 2 areas in 1948. Trade by the Communist bloc with Argentina and Brazil has been responsible for the bulk of this increase.

Total Soviet-bloc trade with Latin America remains—even if the goal of $500 million is reached—less than 15 percent of the total United States-Latin American trade. It is difficult to conceive that the U. S. S. R. and its allies could materially increase the proportion of its share of Latin American trade on a permanent basis in the kinds of machinery and capital equipment suggested by Bulganin in his overtures. This is not, however, to say that significant inroads could not be made by the Communists or that future increases in trade of some size may not be expected.

In this respect, it should be remembered that the U. S. S. R. is under terrific pressure to supply heavy goods, machinery, equipment, and the like for the needs of its expanding domestic economy. The Soviet Union at the present stage of its development does not have the productive levels in capital goods to supply its own needs fully, much less to export large quantities of them. It must further be remembered, however, that the foreign trade of a controlled Communist economy is capable of being manipulated for purely political purposes along the lines suggested above. Thus the U. S. S. R. may judge that the gains for its international designs from a specifically tailored exchange of machinery for agricultural products in surplus in a given Latin American State may outweigh the momentary loss to the expansion of its domestic economy. Further, of course, is the fact that the U. S. S. R. is short in agricultural commodities for its own consumption; it could make likewise good use of imported consumer goods. But the decision to obtain these items in exchange for heavy equipment and the like remains one geared to the overall political purposes of the U. S. S. R.

The attractiveness with which dealing with the Soviet Union and its satellites may be viewed by given Latin American countries in economic straits should not obscure certain clear dangers in such trade.

First. As has been pointed out above, Soviet foreign trade is an integral part of the drive for respectability and acceptance in the recipient nations. Reliance on such trade might increase the acceptability of the national democratic front idea.

Second. Acceptance of key items of machinery and so forth from the U. S. S. R. creates the possibility of undue reliance on the Soviet Union for the maintenance and expansion of critical types of equipment.

Third. Since the Soviet Union is not forced to rely on the essentially politically motivated trade, it might exact from the recipient of such trade the price of support of the U. S. S. R.—or at least coolness toward the West—in international negotiations and organizations for the continuance of such trade.

Fourth. Acceptance of heavy machinery and equipment from the Communist-bloc nations entails frequently the importation of technicians from those nations for the maintenance of that equipment, with the possibility of an undue reliance on the technical know-how of the Communists. Communist technicians are not unknown to indulge in other kinds of activities.

Communist trade overtures to Latin America, then, can be seen to have a certain degree of attractiveness to individual Latin American Republics facing particular economic problems. At the same time, the nature of the Communist-bloc government and economy allows such trade to be carried on principally for its effects on the overall political strategy and goals of the Soviet Union. Acceptance of such trade by Latin American States involves dangers to the recipient state and to the Western World along the lines described in the previous paragraph.

VIII

The future of Latin America as an industrial world stronghold remains to be developed, but Latin America carries the full potential for such a future. Brazil alone has been described as comparable to the United States of the mid-19th century, capable of an expansion over the coming decades equal to that of the United States in the past century. The stake of the United States in the future of this great area is large, not only in the coldly material sense but in the best sense of the policy of the good neighbor concerned for the proper development of Latin America as an area wherein economic success takes place in a society devoted to the values of the Western World—freedom, liberty, dignity of the individual.

It is important to present to Latin America an image of the United States which accurately reflects the United States as a nation sharing so fully in the ideals present in current Latin American aspirations. Central to the ideology of the American democracy is the Declaration of Independence, which is a living documentation of abhorrence of imperialism and of developed nationalism based on the recognition of human values, not narrow materialistic chauvinism.

But there is far more for the United States to do in implementing the policy of the "good neighbor." The individual economic needs of each Latin American state ought carefully be appraised, and the wealth of the United States wisely used to aleviate economic distress. Out of the billions and billions of dollars of foreign-aid grants and credits of the past decade, Latin America has received around 2.4 percent; in the last fiscal year around 2 percent of all foreign grants of the United States went to Latin America.

It should not be argued that grants of economic aid represent the sole or final solution to the problems of non-industrial areas; it should not be argued that the bulk of the economic expansion of such areas is not the proper province of free enterprise. However, the underlying immediate needs of Latin America as an underdeveloped area do require large-scale development funds which cannot be found in private investment sources. Highways, railroads, communications, development of power resources, and the like, are all fundamental to the creation of a modern industrial economy. The lag in such areas in most of Latin America is tremendous, and the large-scale jump in these areas can only be made by provision of development funds from sources other than private enterprise. By substantial increases in its assistance to development projects carefully chosen in mutual cooperation with the affected Latin American state, the United States could do much to create the basis for broader economies of greater stability.

It may be argued that this represents the application once again of the philosophy of the foreign-aid program of the past decade, but one must remember that that program has barely touched Latin America. Further, the greatest opportunity for the effective use of such aid funds lies in the more underdeveloped areas; much of the criticism attached to aid programs for areas more economically mature does not apply in the case of Latin America.

Leading Latin American spokesmen put this argument most strongly at the Rio Economic Conference in November 1954. President Cafe Filho of Brazil underlined the necessity of putting greater emphasis on the economic aspect of the inter-American system, hoping that future generations would not be able to say that the statesmen of today met the crucial problem of cooperation for economic development with "too little and too late."

The current stress of the Eisenhower administration on the United States as the "good partner" seems to rely far too far, in the minds of many Latin American leaders, on private programs in economic development. Given the United States grants necessary to construct the bases for a modern economy, the possibilities for future free private enterprise investment are limitless. But the dominant current need is development capital not being supplied from private sources, and not, in its nature, likely to be supplied from private sources.

This suggestion for economic aid on an increased scale to Latin America should not be viewed as the single approach to our relationship with that area. Concurrently, programs of technical aid to Latin America ought to be expanded by the United States. The accurate presentation of the image of the United States to Latin America, the continued maintenance of the inter-American security system, the expansion of United States private enterprise capital, south of the border, the performance in all United States relations with Latin America as a "good partner" who remains a "good neighbor," are all vital to a proper relationship. New ways of exploring common interests should be steadily sought, such as, for example, Senator MANSFIELD's recent proposal for a university of the Americas.

IX

The current Communist offensive in Latin America has been examined, its strengths and weaknesses noted. Brief suggestions have been made for the United States response to this offensive. Such a response could be the most effective repulse of the Communist offensive in that area, and could open a new era of constantly expanding and mutually profitable relations between the cultures and the economies of the free Americas. If the Communist offensive may have the effect of reemphasizing to the United States its stake in the magnificent future of Latin America, it may be a blessing in disguise.

Building of Alternate Canal Route Is Answer to Nasser

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, Messrs. Dulles, Eden, and Pineau have reaped what they have sown. The dismay at Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal brings to mind a similar dismay when they learned of the Czech-Egypt arms agreement. They have pursued a consistent policy of appeasement subordinating national self-respect to the fog of fear. They were passive when Egypt closed the Suez Canal to Israeli shipping, failing to see that as a forerunner of Egyptian arrogance. Through United States Ambassadors Caffrey and Byroade, they fed this arrogance and helped to build this outsize picture of Nasser.

Military and economic reprisals would be the least satisfactory of policies. There is, however, the proposal of good sense, and that is the building of an alternate canal from Elath on the Gulf of Akaba—Red Sea—across Israel to Ascalon on the Mediterranean.

The cost would not be too great. The very preparation and original digging for such a canal would reduce Nasser to size. The cost could be kept down to $150 million; bonds therefor could be readily sold. Little government cost would be involved.

The United States, Great Britain, and France should give immediate and serious consideration to this proposal. It is noted that this very proposal is the subject of considerable talk among high government officials in Great Britain. The proposal, in and of itself, would have considerable merit had there been no seizure by Egypt of the Suez Canal. Its obvious worth is underscored now. The Western Powers need not be caught helpless in the face of the present international tangle.

Report to the People of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. BYRNES
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report to the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Wisconsin on my voting and attendance record for the 2d session of the 84th Congress.

No attempt has been made to include votes on all of the numerous bills, motions, and amendments. The report includes all rollcall votes and all quorum calls. Its purpose is to collect in one place and in concise form information which is scattered through some 14,000 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The descriptions of the bills and the amendments or motions as contained in the report are for the purposes of identification only; no attempt is made to describe the legislation completely or to elaborate upon the issues involved. I believe this word of caution is advisable in view of the fact that the descriptions used are, for the most part, taken from the official titles of the bills which unfortunately do not always completely reflect the nature or purpose of the legislation. Upon request, I will be pleased to furnish more complete information concerning any particular bill, as well as a summary of the issues involved and the reasons for my vote.

The furnishing of this report continues a service I began in the 1st session of the 80th Congress. This is the 10th report of my voting and attendance record. These 10 reports show how I voted on 1,430 questions in the House of Representatives during the last 10 years. Based on quorum calls—calls of the House—and the record votes, they also show an attendance record of 95 percent.

Voting and attendance record, Representative JOHN W. BYRNES, 8th District, Wisconsin (84th Cong., 2d sess.)

AN EXPLANATION OF TERMS

Of necessity the report contains parliamentary and legislative terms with which the reader may not be familiar. An explanation of some of these terms may, therefore, be helpful:

A. A quorum call consists of a calling of the roll of Members to determine whether or not a quorum—a majority of Members—is present. No business may be conducted when it is found that a quorum is not present.

B. Recommittal: Generally, on all important bills, a motion to recommit the bill to a committee, with or without instructions, is voted upon by the House before it votes upon passage of the bill. If such a motion is adopted, it means that the bill will be changed, delayed, or even killed. However, when a motion to recommit is accompanied by instructions, the vote generally indicates whether the Member is in favor of or opposed to the change in the legislation proposed by the instructions and does not necessarily indicate his position on the bill as a whole. A motion to recommit with instructions, if adopted, does not kill the bill.

C. The type of bill can be determined by the letters which precede its number. All bills that originate in the House are designated by an H; those that originate in the Senate by an S. There are four main types:

First. H. R. (S.) designates a bill which when passed by both Houses in identical form and signed by the President, becomes law.

Second. H. J. Res. (S. J. Res.) designates a joint resolution which must pass both Houses and be signed by the President before becoming law. It is generally used for continuing the life of an existing law, or in submitting to the States a constitutional amendment, in which case it does not require the signature of the President but must be passed by a two-thirds majority of both Houses.

Third. H. Con. Res. (S. Con. Res.) designates a concurrent resolution. To become effective it must be passed by both the House and Senate but does not require the President's signature. It is used to take joint action which is purely within the jurisdiction of Congress. Many emergency laws carry the provision that they may be terminated by concurrent resolution, thus eliminating the possibility of a Presidential veto.

Fourth. H. Res. (S. Res.) designates a simple resolution of either body. It does not require approval by the other body nor the signature of the President. It is used to deal with matters that concern one House only, such as changing rules, creating special committees, and so forth.

D. Rule: Important bills, after approval of the committee concerned, go to the House Committee on Rules where a rule, in the form of a House resolution (H. Res.), is granted covering the time allowed for debate, consideration of amendments, and other parliamentary questions.

E. Conference: Representatives from both Houses of Congress meet in conference to work out differences existing in the legislation as passed by the two bodies. Upon conclusion of their conference, a report is submitted to each House setting forth the agreements reached. Each House then must act by way of adopting or rejecting the report in whole or in part.

F. Ordering the previous question: A motion to order the previous question, if adopted, shuts off further debate on the question before the House and prevents further amendments to such proposition.

G. A bill may pass, or be defeated, by one of the following kind of votes:

First. Voice vote: The Speaker first asks all in favor to say "aye" then those opposed to say "nay." If there is no question as to the result, this is sufficient.

Second. Division: If the result of the voice vote is in doubt, the Speaker asks those in favor to stand, then those opposed to stand. He counts in each instance and announces the result. If he is in doubt, or if demand is made by one-fifth of a quorum, then—

Third. Tellers are ordered. A Member on each side of the question is appointed as teller, and they take their places at each side of the center aisle. Those in favor walk through and are counted. Those opposed do likewise. The result settles most questions, but any Member, supported by one-fifth of a quorum, can ask for a rollcall. This privilege is guaranteed by the Constitution.

Fourth. Rollcalls place each Member on record on the particular measure involved. Each Member's name is called and his vote is recorded. Rollcalls constitute the official voting record of the House.

The outcome of various votes are indicated in parentheses in the record above. In the case of rollcall votes, the actual vote is shown—the yeas first and the nays last.

Trip-Leasing Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OREN HARRIS
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, many Members of the House have expressed an interest in a brief explanation of the provisions contained in the trip-leasing bill, which has passed the Congress.

When the bill passed the House, I gave a full explanation of the bill. Even though it was thoroughly discussed, I fully realize the difficulty in readily comprehending the bill, because of its technical features.

In an effort to be helpful, I have prepared a memorandum as briefly as possible in explanation of the legislation.

Under unanimous consent, I include the memorandum in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF TRIP-LEASING LEGISLATION, S. 898, 84TH CONGRESS

The legislation would authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise certain regulatory control over the leasing of motor vehicles by motor common and contract carriers, when such vehicles are to be driven for the carriers by the owner, or an employee of the owner, of the vehicle. This legislation is not concerned with the leasing of a motor vehicle when such vehicle is leased without the services of a driver.

The Commission is granted authority by this legislation to prescribe regulations as to certain contents of the lease, and regulation which would assure that the motor carrier would have full direction and control of the leased vehicle and be fully responsible for its operation. The Commission is also given authority to establish requirements with respect to inspection and the safety of operation of such vehicles.

However, the Commission is denied authority to regulate the duration of a trip-lease of a motor vehicle, with driver, or the amount of compensation for the use of such vehicle, when the vehicle is that of (1) a farmer, (2) a farmer-cooperative organization or federation, or (3) a for-hire or private carrier when such vehicle has completed a movement of property specified in the agricultural exemptions specified in section 203 (b) (6) of the Interstate Commerce Act. Under this section, motor vehicles used in carrying property consisting of ordinary livestock, fish (including shellfish), or agricultural (including horticultural) commodities (not including manufactured products thereof), are exempted from economic regulation by the Commission, but are subject to its safety regulations.

In other words, regulated motor common and contract carriers would be permitted to trip lease the motor vehicle, with driver, of a farmer, a farm cooperative association or federation, or the motor vehicle of a for-hire or private carrier which has completed a movement of property specified in section 203 (b) (6) of the act. Also, regulated motor carriers would be permitted to trip lease the motor vehicle of a private carrier when such vehicle is used regularly in the transportation of perishable products manufactured from property specified in section 203 (b) (6). Examples of such perishable products are frozen orange juice, or frozen vegetables.

The direction of movement of the trip-leased vehicle is limited generally to a single movement, or one or more of a series of movements, in the general direction of the general area in which the trip-leased vehicle is based.

A more detailed statement of this legislation is given in House Report No. 2425, 84th Congress.

Court Review for Veterans With Service-Connected Disabilities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. BENNETT
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on February 16 of this year I introduced a bill to provide court review from decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals which disallow in whole or in part any claim for a benefit or payment for disability or death resulting from disease or injury incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service.

Under existing law the Board of Veterans' Appeals is the Supreme Court so far as disabled veterans are concerned. Its decisions are final both as to law and fact. If this Board make a mistake, there is no way to correct it unless the Board itself changes its viewpoint.

I have handled many cases for disabled veterans and their dependents during my service in Congress where the decision of the Board of Veterans' Appeals was clearly in error. In some instances I have been able to persuade the Board to reverse its previous decision, but in most instances the Board refuses to budge—right or wrong. I am sure many Members of this House have had experiences similar to my own, which is one of the reasons I am convinced that some method of providing further review of these decisions must be found.

During the last session of Congress I introduced a bill in behalf of a veteran who had lost the vision in one eye from an injury received in service. This bill was passed unanimously by both the House and Senate. The Board of Veterans' Appeals had repeatedly denied this veteran his pension. Thus we had a situation where 435 Members of Congress disagree with 3 members of the Board of Veterans' Appeals on the question of this man's entitlement to compensation.

It should not be the function of Congress to review the decisions of administrative agencies, and therefore the proper procedure in these cases is to permit a veteran with a service-connected claim to have his day in court. That is what my bill seeks to do.

The House Judiciary Committee held hearings on my bill last spring. Unfortunately that committee did not report the bill in order to give the House an opportunity to consider it. I am confident that, when the bill is considered, it will pass this House with an overwhelming majority.

The legislation has the approval and support of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion of Michigan, and I am sure will ultimately have the support of the national departments of all veterans' organizations.

Other citizens are entitled to their day in court, and it is high time we provided the disabled veteran and his dependents with this same privilege.

Address of the Honorable W. M. Abbitt at the Virginia Democratic Convention in Richmond, Va., July 27, 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM M. TUCK
OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. TUCK. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable WATKINS M. ABBITT delivered the keynote address at the State Democratic Convention in Richmond, Va., on July 27, 1956, and his remarks were received by the delegates therein assembled with great enthusiasm and favor.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following text of Mr. ABBITT's sound and inspiring address:

ADDRESS OF THE HONORABLE W. M. ABBITT AT THE VIRGINIA DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION IN RICHMOND, VA., JULY 27, 1956

I count it a high honor and a great privilege, as well as a real pleasure, for me to be here today to talk briefly to the Democrats of Virginia. It is always a pleasure to meet with real Virginia Democrats. Here in Virginia the Democratic Party was bred and nurtured. Virginia is the cradle of democracy. In my opinion, the Democrats of Virginia have kept the faith of our Founding Fathers. I am proud of the great heritage that we in Virginia have. Virginians can be proud of the record of our Democratic Party, its accomplishments as well as the aims and ideals that have been our guiding light down through the years. Our State government has been a model for other States. We have had clean, honest, efficient government, whose officials have been untarnished and unblemished by corruption or fraud.

In these trying times, and believe you me these are trying times, it is well that we think back and review the principles of democracy so that we might be guided in the future by the light of the experiences of the past. The Democratic Party was founded for the purpose of protecting the rights and privileges of the people as well as the sovereignty of the individual States. It was founded by that great Virginian, Thomas Jefferson, who realized the evils thereof and the danger of creating a strong centralized governmental monstrosity if the rights of the people were to be preserved. He realized that the best governed were the least governed. He knew, as we know today, that any centralized government is constantly grasping and seeking power, constantly trying to take from the individual citizens their rights and privileges in an endeavor to secure power for the government. He realized, as we realize, that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. He knew, as we know, that there is no such thing as something for nothing; that no money is handed out from the Federal Treasury except and until it has been first extracted from the individuals who make up this great country of ours of some one hundred sixty-odd million souls.

The Democratic Party has been the party of the masses, the party of the common people and everyday citizens as opposed to the party of big business. I hope and trust that we can keep the Democratic Party on the right track and headed in the right direction maintaining the principles upon which it was founded.

In the past few years, we have seen many people, would-be political leaders, endeavoring to chart a new course for our Nation; endeavoring to build up a strong all-powerful centralized government; endeavoring to take away the rights, privileges, and liberties of our people and to strike down the sovereignty of the individual States. Yes, endeavoring to federalize and socialize whenever possible.

There are and have been political hacks who, in their desire and greed to obtain political preferment, are willing to change the entire philosophy of our Government, to make the people the vassals of the Government, the servant of the Government rather than the Government the servant of the people. In the very recent past, we have seen the judicial arm of the Federal Government attempt to strike down the customs, habits, mores, and traditions of our people by usurpation of authority that they never had, authority that was specifically retained by our Founding Fathers for the people themselves and the individual sovereign States.

According to the Vice President of these United States of America, the Court that rendered that decision was headed by a "great Republican Chief Justice." I am sure that no one in the sound of my voice would want to dispute the claim of the Vice President as to the political affiliation of the head of that Court. Only recently in Virginia, we have seen in the press where another Republican judge entered an order on the same subject which was equally as obnoxious.

My friends, we cannot afford to sit idly by and see the rights and privileges of our people gradually taken from them by an octopuslike arm of our Government which is attempting by judicial decree to amend the Constitution and thus strike down constitutional government. Now is the time for men and women to stand upon principles that we know are right and just. I call upon the Democrats of Virginia to stand steadfast upon the principles of the founding fathers of this great party of ours; to exert every effort possible in these perilous days to preserve for posterity and to hand down to oncoming generations this civilization of ours as it was wrought out for us by the Founding Fathers.

I think it is fitting that we review for a moment one of the great principles of our party and its patron saint, Thomas Jefferson. He believed in strong, local, self-government, and the dignity of the individual. That has been one of the main tenets of the Democratic Party. I want to see our people cling to this ideal and demand that this country of ours get back on the right track and continue to recognize constitutional government, the sovereignty of our States and the freedoms, the privileges and the dignity of the individual.

It is discouraging to observe that the spirit of self-reliance so dominant among our early leaders is becoming more difficult to find today. It is alarming to note that principle is being sacrificed too often for the sake of political expediency. The lure of a welfare state has caused many to surrender their liberties. When a sovereign State permits or invites the Federal Government to perform any of its functions, the moral fiber is weakened and we rapidly approach a state of dependency. Such a condition is foreign to our teachings and should be distasteful to every Virginian.

So many of our people forget the duties and obligations they owe as citizens of this great country of ours. It is so easy to look for security rather than to stand upon principles. I think we as Virginia Democrats must rededicate ourselves to the principles upon which our great party was founded and to let the world know we intend to stand on those principles and the things we know and believe to be right.

I say to you when there are principles involved, such as we face today, if we are to maintain our way of life, if we are to continue constitutional government, if we are to retain for our children and our children's children their liberties and freedoms then we must stand up like men and women and fight for those principles.

I realize it is very popular today to run with the crowd, to put up token resistance to things we don't believe in but to finally succumb to the majority and go along with the crowd. The continuance of this action could well mean the annihilation of our way of life as well as the wrecking of the Democratic Party as we know it and which we love so much.

The need of the time is for a leadership willing to face the facts. Complacency toward what is happening is a betrayal of the America we have inherited. The kind of leader that people are willing to stay with, and to sacrifice personally for, is the kind that says, "I'm going to fight it out on this line if it takes until eternity."

Wavering and self-interest through compromise where vital points are at stake never yet held a following. To win this struggle we have got to get on the right side of the road and keep it with resolution.

Here in Virginia, yes; and in all the Southland, we are facing today a great crisis. There are those who would have us to yield and to sacrifice the principles upon which this great country was founded because, as it appears now, we are faced with superior forces. There are those who would have us sublimely submit to the illegal, unauthorized, unwarranted and iniquitous decision of May 17, 1954, of the Supreme Court of the United States of America. This decision, as we all know, was based not upon legal precedent, the pole star of legal jurisprudence in Virginia and all English-speaking countries, but rather upon the sociological philosophy of a foreign-born sociologist whose name is mentioned prominently in the records of the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives.

If we in Virginia sublimely submit then we have lost all hope of retaining constitutional government in this country of ours. To combat this decision will require sacrifice; it will mean hardship, yes; and more, but to me the privilege of being and remaining an American, the privilege of retaining for my children and my children's children the rights, privileges, and freedoms that have been carved out of this wilderness by our forefathers is worth all of the sacrifice necessary, all of the hardship that is forthcoming and all of the wealth we possess that men might continue to walk upon the face of this good earth with dignity and the retention of their self-respect.

I have faith in the people of Virginia. I believe they have the intestinal fortitude, the love for freedom, the burning desire to maintain our way of life to such an extent that they will do whatever is necessary to maintain our rights and freedoms. Yes; our very way of life.

I do not know what sacrifices will be necessary or what hardships we will have to overcome, but whatever is necessary that we will do or we will forever and a day lose our way of life as we know it together with all the freedoms and privileges that have meant so much to the people of this great country.

I hope, believe, and trust that the Democrats of Virginia will stand together on this great issue, it being the issue upon which our party was founded.

What can we do to maintain as well as preserve our way of life? I say to you in all candor, there is no hope in the National Republican Party or those who are running the present administration. In 1952, we were led to believe that the present administration, if they were elected, would stand firm for States rights. Apparently, since the election of 1952, not a thought has been given to that campaign promise. The present Attorney General, upon the bidding of the Chief Executive, has done more, in my opinion, than any one man to bring about the crisis we are now facing. He intervened in the famous school case, insisting and demanding that all of the past legal precedent be ignored and that the Supreme Court, in effect, amend the Constitution. It was he who appeared before the appropriate committees of the Congress urging those committees to report out legislation known as the so-called civil-rights bill. The name, of course, is a misnomer. It is anything but a civil-rights bill unless the depriving of individuals of their liberties and the States of their sovereignty is civil rights. This legislation, if enacted into law, strikes at the very heart of the liberties and freedoms of our people. The Republican leaders in the House who had charge of the civil-rights legislation boldly shouted at the tops of their voices that the legislation not only had the blessings of the Chief Executive but was introduced at his bidding and upon his urging. In my opinion, it is an effort on their part to influence certain minority segments of our society in utter disregard of the welfare of our people, regardless of the consequences to the liberties and freedoms that were wrought out for us by the sweat, blood, and tears of those great patriots who have gone on before. It is an attempt to strike down with one stroke of the legislative pen the theory of our very form of government itself. This legislation strikes down the right of trial by jury. It does away with the sovereignty of our States. It takes from our individuals their right to be tried in the local courts. It sets up a small Gestapo under the direction of an Assistant Attorney General who will be the political hatchet man of the administration in power. It allows our people to be dragged from the four corners of our country and brought before an agent of the Federal Government without a charge being brought against them and without knowing who instigated the investigation. It is an iniquitous piece of legislation. It is one we would expect in a totalitarian government. It could well be the beginning of the end of our very way of life and of democracy itself in this great country of ours if it ever becomes the law of the land. I say to you its main sponsor as of this moment is the present administration that told us in 1952 that they were running on a great platform of States rights.

I say frankly to you Democratic men and women of Virginia, there is no hope for us in the Republican Party. They will never aid or assist us in retaining our way of life nor in preserving for us the precious heritage that is rightfully ours. They would sell our very birthright for a mess of political porridge. I tell you that the record of the Republican administration in Washington has been a disappointment to those Virginia Democrats who believed in 1952 that the cause of sound government demanded that they leave the ranks of the National Democratic Party. The discrepancy between Republican promise and performance in Federal finances, resistance to socialistic experimentation, and defense of the integrity of local governments makes it plain to us that the present administration has been one of broken promises and an attempt to outdeal the New Deal.

Those Democrats who supported the Republican Party in 1952 could not have foreseen the rapidity with which the promises that attracted them were to be shelved after Inauguration Day.

For instance, we can recall in the campaign speech in New York in October 1952 the Republican candidate for President promised, and I quote, "We are dedicated to better education without letting the Federal Government stick its long nose into local business." Almost one of the first acts of the present administration was to have the chief law-enforcement officer, the Attorney General of the United States, stick the long nose of the Federal Government into a lawsuit pending between the Commonwealth of Virginia and certain pupils in the public schools of Prince Edward County. Contrary to that solemn Republican promise to respect the right of the States to order and control domestic institutions, the Supreme Court was told by the mouthpiece of the Chief Executive that peace in the world required the decision of the case in Virginia.

Then, too, it was impossible for us to foresee in 1952 that a Republican Vice President would be able to brag that these domestic institutions were being uprooted under the leadership of a great Republican Chief Justice, nor that Representative JOSEPH W. MARTIN of Massachusetts, Republican leader of the House, would join hands with Representative ADAM CLAYTON POWELL, of New York City's Harlem, in support of a law to tax the citizens of Virginia for Federal aid to education but deny them the financial benefits of this taxation.

The Republicans in 1952 promised debt reduction, and almost as soon as they took office the Chief Executive demanded that Congress increase the national debt limit. He promised fiscal sanity. Then he tried to win congressional approval of an irresponsible bond-selling scheme for highway construction with the added audacity of demanding that the bonds not be counted as a part of the debt of the United States of America. But for the valiant efforts of stalwart Democrats, the bond scheme would have been perpetrated upon the American people and the Eisenhower administration could still claim a balanced budget. The economy promises of the present administration have been followed by substantial increases in nondefense spending and their farm policies have aided neither farmer nor consumer.

In 1952, the national Democratic candidate advocated enactment of the Compulsory Fair Employment Practice Act while the Republican candidate opposed it; but, suffice it to say, it was impossible for us to see in 1952 that within 2 years the Republican Vice President would boast truthfully that the major civil-rights aims of the FEPC had been accomplished by the administration without even submitting FEPC to a vote of the people's elective representatives in the Congress.

In 1952 we were afraid of creeping socialism, and I say to you this day in 1956 the socialistic trend, if anything, has been accelerated by the present administration. The Democrats were not outvoted in 1952—they were outpromised. Today, however, fellow Democrats, we in Virginia and the Nation have the Eisenhower record of 3½ years in office on which to base our judgment next November.

In my opinion, it is a record of broken promises. Let's take the promise to the farmers, for an example. To a lot of farmers today, Benson is a fighting word, with the polls showing that the Secretary of Agriculture is about as popular with feed growers as an invasion of locusts, about as popular with cattlemen as Bang's disease, about as popular with the tobacco people as the blue mold, and as popular with the peanut producers as the lifting of import quotas; and discerning voters are not going to buy this Eisenhower farm program as a Benson program.

It was President Eisenhower, not Secretary Benson, who pledged 100 percent of parity, and officially broke that campaign promise to the farmers early in 1954. I am beginning to wonder if the Eisenhower farm program is what the President is talking about when he describes his program as one of "dynamic conservatism." To the Virginia farmers and to the Nation, it has meant a dynamic cut in prices that is doing little to conserve the farmer's income. I don't think Virginia's farmers are being sold on another term of Eisenhower government.

But what about the Eisenhower program of progressive moderation? This might well be used to describe small business under this Republican administration since small business is being progressively moderated right out of existence.

During the 1952 campaign, the candidate in a nationwide telecast expressed a deep concern for small business. "I must say," he told his television audience, "I think in the long run we should be even more concerned about small business than big business, because big businesses were all small businesses at one time, that is certain."

Now, today it is also certain that big business has taken over this administration and left small business out in the cold. Official statistics of the Department of Commerce reveal the fact that small-business profits are down to one-third of what they were under the Democrats, while the rate of business failures has doubled under the Eisenhower administration.

Earlier this year, we had the frank admission from the Department of Commerce that a man starting his own business today has only a 50–50 chance of lasting 2 years.

Of course, no one expected Secretary of Commerce Weeks to do anything about this, since he has clearly indicated that his role in the Cabinet post is to help big business, which put him there in the first place.

The Republican candidate in 1952 talked repeatedly about the high cost of living and how he would bring it down if elected. Yet, during the present administration's first year in office in 1953, the cost of living hit its record peak in our history and it stayed right up there too, until June of 1956. Then came the new record peak in our history, when the Eisenhower administration broke its own previous record high in the cost of living, setting a new alltime high.

We were promised a balanced budget and we hear the budget balancers boasting of a $2 billion surplus in the Treasury. At one and the same time, we see an alarmed group of Senators on the Armed Services Committee of the Senate listen to one Air Force general after another testify about the big cuts in the necessary fund for the proper protection and defense of our country. What they said, in effect, was that they had been denied the money which meant that the world's most powerful Nation would soon have the world's second best Air Force. This came as quite a shock to those of us who had been assured by the present administration that the drastic cuts in our Armed Forces personnel would more than be made up by our overwhelmingly superior Air Force.

I say to you that the budget has been balanced in spite of the administration. It was balanced because of (1) drastic cuts in defense appropriations; (2) the rapidly expanding economy of the country; and (3) a cut of over $2 billion made by the Democratic Congress in the budget request of Eisenhower. In other words, the present administration backed into a balanced budget for the time being, through no efforts of its own.

We come now to the question—Wherein lies the hope of the South? The South is and always has been the backbone of the Democratic Party. And in turn, the Democratic Party has always been the home, the hope, and the sanctuary of the South. It is true that not all Democrats agreed on all the issues within our party. In that respect, our political party differs from the British. In Britain, most issues are fought out between the 2 major parties but here in the United States, we debate issues within parties as well as between parties. I think that is helpful.

It is true there are wide areas of disagreement between Democrats in the North and South. Southern statesmen are leaders in the Congress and leaders of important committees in the House and Senate. Upon the record of the parties as of today, I say to you in all candor and frankness that I believe it best to fight in the party caucuses for the principles that we believe in and know to be right whenever possible.

In the coming months, we will hear a great deal about the necessity of a Republican Congress in order to carry out Ike's great program of progress.

In 1952, the people gave to Ike all that he asked in the shape of the Republican 83d Congress. Recently, we were given the benefit of the inside story as to how that worked. The palace guard that surrounds President Eisenhower and that makes the decisions during the prolonged interregnums of his illnesses, decided that there should be an official biography to present Ike to the American people during the fall election in the most favorable light possible. After careful deliberation, the biographer was selected. He was given access to all secret files, including top secret minutes of Cabinet meetings and those denied not only to the public but to committees of the Congress.

The book has recently been published. It tells from the inside how Ike liked the doings of the Republican 83d Congress. He was so disgusted with its performance, says his official biographer, that he gave serious consideration to the formation of a third party and even went so far as to select the name of that party.

But Republican orators will say that that won't happen anymore. The elephant has been made over into Ike's liberal image, and if Ike is again elected with a Republican Congress, we need not again fear that its conduct will cause a flare-up of ileitis.

Do I understand, therefore, that the good people of Southside should return big BILL TUCK to South Boston in order that they may send a Republican Congressman to Washington to help Ike integrate the schools and carry out his civil rights program?

Do I understand that the good people of the Richmond area should retire VAUGHAN GARY from his important position on the Committee on Appropriations in order that Ike might raise our contribution to Marshal Tito and put all such programs on a permanent basis?

Am I to understand that the people of Tidewater are to retire ED ROBESON to the shipping yards in order that we might carry out Ike's program to emasculate the Taft-Hartley law?

Is BURR HARRISON to be returned to the valley from his vital position on Ways and Means in order that we might carry out Ike's program of a permanent increase in the national debt by $15 billion, or applaud such new juggling acts with the Nation's finances as setting up Government corporations to issue bonds which would not be counted as part of the national debt, as was attempted in the $30 billion highway bond scheme?

Is PAT JENNINGS to be returned to southwest Virginia so Benson will be allowed to ride herd on the American farmer?

Are the people of Piedmont and the northern neck to retire to pasture that most beloved and most respected of Congressmen in the United States, Judge HOWARD W. SMITH, in order that Ike may clear through the Rules Committee his program for socialized housing?

I read in the press of the nomination for Congress in the Norfolk area of a recent arrival of a new citizen whose total claim to fame seems to be that on some occasion he gave up his home to Ike for a weekend of golfing. Are the good people of Norfolk and the second district to be asked to retire Congressman HARDY who is doing such a great job in order that he may be succeeded by one who is so slavishly devoted to Ike that he will give up his home, our traditions and our principles to carry out his program?

The simple truth is, and the record proves it, that the hope of good government lies in the election of a Democratic administration with a Democratic Congress dominated by men from the Southern States, men like JOHNSON and RAYBURN as majority leaders; like BYRD, of Virginia, chairman of the vital Committee on Finance; and RUSSELL and VINSON, of Georgia, and HARDY, of Virginia, on Armed Services; ELLENDER, of Louisiana, and PAT JENNINGS, of Virginia, on Agriculture; FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, and ROBERTSON, of Virginia, on Banking and Currency; GEORGE, of Georgia, and RICHARDS, of South Carolina, on Foreign Relations; MCCLELLAN, of Arkansas, rather than MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin, as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations; EASTLAND, of Mississippi, and TUCK, of Virginia, on Judiciary; that great southern statesman, GRAHAM BARDEN, of North Carolina, on Education and Labor, MURRAY, of Tennessee, and ROBESON, of Virginia, on Post Office and Civil Service.

These men will take what is good in any President's program. They have the capacity, the intelligence and the vision to enact it into law, but regardless of what President may recommend programs to destroy the solvency of the Nation or to bring its agriculture to its knees or to emasculate its constitution, these great southerners will stand as a stone wall as did Jackson and his men at Manassas and will again inspire the battle cry to "rally behind the Virginians."

Amalgamated Clothing Workers—Transcript of Address by Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell at the 20th Biennial Convention, Washington, D. C., May 23, 1956

OF
HON. T. MILLET HAND
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I append here a recent address by our Secretary of Labor to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, one of our finest labor unions:

AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS—TRANSCRIPT OF ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF LABOR JAMES P. MITCHELL AT THE 20TH BIENNIAL CONVENTION, WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 23, 1956

Thank you, Mr. Potofsky. Officers, delegates, friends of this convention, I am very happy to be here. I am very sorry that, at your convention in 1954, I was unable to be present, because I look upon the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as friends of mine, and I want to assure you that I am a friend of yours. [Applause.]

Incidentally, I must say, I had the opportunity, together with Mrs. Mitchell, of having brunch with the members of your board and your president and their charming wives, at Arthur Goldberg's house on Sunday, and, in order to set the record straight, one of your board members, immediately upon my arrival, looked to see if I had an Amalgamated label in the pocket of my suit. [Laughter.] There was such a label in it. [Laughter.] Today, I have on my other suit and I can assure you that it has an Amalgamated label in it too. [Laughter and applause.]

This union is particularly to be held up by all of us who prize and treasure trade unionism in this country as a model of industrial democracy.

It has been an outstanding union in that you have translated the sweat shop—the sweat shop of not so many years ago, the sweat shop which I am sure still lives in the memory of some of those present—you have translated the sweat shop into a high standard of living for your members, and you have done it in an era of mutual trust and mutual aid, and you have built a model of labor-management relations upon which you are to be congratulated.

It seems to me that the present welfare of your members stands in sharp contrast to the period when sweat shops were common and workers, many of them immigrants, were exploited; and your union has been a moving force in that change in the American scene.

I was glad to note that your executive board reports that in the past 2 years you have gained 19,000 members and organized 300 shops, bringing your total membership to over 400,000, and that is a long way, a long, long way from the 70,000 members in 1932.

I am also glad to note that you have wage increases and that you have otained improved insurance benefits for over 150,000 clothing workers.

I understand that one of your objectives is so fittingly and appropriately called Bread and Roses, and I would say that your achievements in attaining the bread and roses in the last several years have been remarkable.

You have opened two new health centers, the Laundry Workers in New York and the Sidney Hillman Center in Chicago, and so you have doubled your service to your membership, and someday I hope that as an honorary, or, shall I say, an affiliated member, of Amalgamated, I might be invited to that workers' paradise as Cornwell, Pa., which you have just acquired.

I understand from those who know about it that it is well worth visiting.

I think that the history of this union will stand as a monument to the progress of American trade unionism, and I join with you in your efforts to achieve what Sidney Hillman well described as a future when men and women will be economically secure and politically free.

Now I would like to talk, if I may, about some facts because, as your President has said, my job in the Labor Department, is to promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of this country, and I assure you, ladies and gentlemen, that so long as I am in that job that will be my sole objective. [Applause.]

So let's take a look at the record, the record of the activities of the Labor Department and the record of the legislative problems and activities of the Labor Department because in that record lies a story. In that record lies a story that I think you and I have to be cognizant of. In that record lies a clear-cut story as to what the workers of this country have to do to make sure that the gains that they are entitled to are secure.

In April of this year, the average weekly wage of the worker in industry in this country was $78.39 a week, which was an all-time record for the month of April. But the really important question is income in terms of purchasing power.

If you have got a lot of money and you can't buy anything with it, it is just the same as though you had none. We compile a statistic in the Labor Department called The Average Net Spendable Weekly Earning. It is the expendable aspect that I think should be of interest. We arrive at the figure by taking the actual average weekly earnings of production workers in manufacturing. We subtract from that all of the deduction like taxes and social security that come out of the weekly wage, and then we adjust the figure for changes in the cost of living.

And the result gives us an indication of the real value of a worker's wage. Now, between 1944 and 1952, the workers of this country received wage increases amounting to $21.89 per week. The gain, however, was an illusion, because inflation and taxes not only cut the increase down; the real spendable earnings of a single man actually dropped by $1.88 a week. Between 1952 and 1955, however, the average worker had received a clear-cut gain in net spendable earnings of about $6 a week. It seems to me that in an attempt to achieve a higher and higher standard of living we must be continually conscious not only of the wage level but of the level of the cost of living, which in the last 2 years has remained virtually steady, making the money that you receive, money your members receive, of more value in terms of purchasing power.

Now, I note from this morning's paper, as another part of the record, that my good friend Louis Hollander, your vice president, says that the same people who are anti-Negro, anti-Jew, and anti-Catholic, are anti-labor and antisocial, and I want you to know that I agree with him 100 percent. [Applause.] And I want to tell you what we are trying to do in this field of minority discrimination.

In the last several years much has been done, and I am going to use as an example right here in the District of Columbia. Two years ago I recommended, and the President appointed, Mr. J. Ernest Wilkins as Assistant Secretary of Labor in charge of international affairs. Mr. Wilkins is a Negro from Chicago, and he was asked at the first press conference he held, "How is it, Mr. Wilkins, that you feel free to come to Washington when a man like Ralph Bunche not so many years ago said that he could not bring his family to Washington because of discriminatory practices?"

And Mr. Wilkins truthfully replied, "I can come to Washington now because things have changed."

Things have changed in this respect: There is no longer discrimination in the District of Columbia eating establishments. Segregation has been abolished in the District of Columbia recreational facilities, in swimming pools, in parks, and in other facilities. Segregation has been done away with in movie houses and in theaters in the District, and racial discrimination has been effectively banned on Federal contract jobs by the President's Committee on Government Contracts. I worked with the President's Committee, and through that Committee we have brought about not only these changes in the District of Columbia but also the abolition of certain discriminatory practices by employers in the District of Columbia.

We have not achieved our goal. We have a long way to go, not only here but throughout the country. But I say to you, ladies and gentlemen, that the objective of the President's Committee, the objective of the Labor Department, is to continually and effectively move ahead so that every single American, regardless of his race or his color or his creed, will have equal opportunity for jobs and will have equal opportunity for education and will have equal opportunity as a citizen of these United States. [Applause.]

Now, your president and officers and your membership have always supported the Department of Labor programs which are designed for the welfare of the wage earners of this country, and I would like to mention a few recent happenings which I am sure are of particular interest to you.

The effectiveness of the Walsh-Healey Act which, as you know, permits the Secretary of Labor to determine minimum wages for work performed on Government contracts, has been threatened by the Fulbright amendment which subjects such wage-finding decisions of the Secretary of Labor to judicial review. We are determined to make the law work and have therefore fought hard to establish sensible and practical administrative procedures to help us enforce this law. And the result has been that, within the last month, we have won in the Supreme Court the right to determine a nationwide minimum in the cotton-textile industry and in the woolen and worsted industry. As you know, these determinations have been enjoined by employers for some years. We have successfully defeated the efforts of the employers to make the act inoperative; and, as a result, we have brought $2½ million in back wages to nearly 100,000 workers in these industries. [Applause.]

Now, I'd like to talk also about some of the other problems of the Department of Labor. Each year since 1953, we have been successful, with your help, in increasing the budget of the Department of Labor so that we might be more effective in the doing of our job for the working people of this country. For example, in 1950 the grand total appropriation in the Department of Labor was $223 million. In 1956, it is $468 million. And with this money, the Department of Labor has increased effectively its enforcement operations in Walsh-Healey, in the Fair Labor, and in the Davis-Bacon Acts.

As an example of the tightness of our enforcement, when the minimum-wage law was passed and made effective in March of 1956, in the men's cotton-garment industry, we refused to go along with the precedent that had been established in 1950 for an extended learning period, and we cut the learning period by 160 hours, because we felt that was a fair thing to do. [Applause.]

You may recall that in 1950, learners' certificates were granted in many industries, and through June 30, 1950 (you may remember, the law became effective in January), in the men-boys suit-coat industry, the Department of Labor granted 205 learners' certificates.

So far this year, we have granted, in the Department of Labor, in the same industry, only 82 learners' certificates, and the reason that number is low, possibly, is because we insist that no learners' certificates be granted, unless there is definite proof that no skilled workers are available. [Applause.] And I hope that any of you who know of the existence of skilled workers in an area where learners' certificates have been granted will let me know.

Now, with relation to this law enforcement, and the additional funds that we have requested and secured from Congress, we propose to continue actively and strenuously our law enforcement in the interests of the workers of this country. We propose to see to it that any employer, who is violating the law, shall be punished, in accordance with the statute. And we propose to continue our enforcement of the laws, so that the fair employer is not subject to the chiseling competition of a law violator. [Applause.]

Just as an example of the difference in the tempo of the law enforcement of the Labor Department, I want to cite you just one figure:

Under the Davis-Bacon Act (an act which as you know, provides that the Secretary of Labor shall find the prevailing wages in Federal construction projects) from 1935 until 1952, four contractors were blacklisted by the Department of Labor, for violating the Davis-Bacon Act, this at a time, remember, when we had the largest construction program in the history of our country.

Since I have been in office, we have blacklisted 46, or nearly 10 times as many, because we propose that the workers of this country shall be protected and that the fair employer shall be protected. [Applause.]

Now, I want to tell you about some of our projects:

We have before Congress a number of legislative proposals, and I have brought them with me, because I thought you might be interested in my scanning them for you.

In November 1953, 1 month after I got this job, before the CIO convention in Cleveland, I said, and I think it was the first time that anyone had said it from a national platform, that I thought the minimum wage should be increased. I said that I thought the coverage of the minimum wage should be expanded. [Applause.]

And I want you to know, ladies and gentlemen, that I have not receded 1 inch from that position, and I am prepared, when the Senate Labor Committee calls hearings, to testify with specific recommendations, for the increase and the coverage of the minimum wage. [Applause.]

Now we have a number of other proposals in the Congress, and I won't recite them in detail. We have a proposal to revise the 8-hour laws which would provide for overtime after 40 hours on Federal construction projects because, do you know (while it may not be of particular news to your members), do you know that under the present law, archaic as it is, that in some sections of this country construction workers working on Federal programs are working 56 hours a week at straight time because the law provides only for overtime after 8 hours.

In these nonunion areas in the South and Southwest, construction workers are working 56 hours a week at straight time—8 hours a day, 7 days a week, and we proposed last year, on February 25, 1955, and on April 20, 1955, we introduced legislation in the Congress to correct this abominable situation, and we have had no action.

Last year in this country, 14,000 people were killed on their jobs, and over 2 million, or nearly 2 million injured—injured to the extent that they lost time. And we proposed legislation last year to promote occupational safety programs in the States by providing grants-in-aid to the States so that a better protection job could be done, more factory inspectors, better laws, better codes.

We introduced that legislation on February 18, 1955, in the Senate, and on April 20, 1955, in the House, and we have had no action.

We have legislation to amend the Workmen's Compensation laws that affect longshore and harbor workers and the private employees of the District of Columbia. This legislation was introduced in 1955. It affects some 650,000 workers in this country, and so far we have had hearings, just hearings, no action.

The President of the United States in his state of the Union message this year said that he would introduce legislation, and he has, to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in the payment of wages, and we have had no action.

We have legislation to provide a nonoccupational disability benefit to the District of Columbia employees because that is the only area that Congress can legislate in this field. This legislation was introduced last year, and there is no action.

We have legislation to improve the unemployment compensation programs of the District of Columbia, and we have no action.

We have legislation which is designed to protect the migrant workers of this country from many bad practices that exist in transporting them from place to place of work. So far we have had no legislation.

We have many other bills which are somewhat technical in nature, and I am not going to talk about them. But when you add up the number of workers that these bills affect on our best estimate—just let me run them down:

One bill, at least 12 million. At least a million on another. The safety bill, 39 million. Six hundred and fifty thousand. Two hundred and fifty thousand. Six hundred and fifty thousand again. One and a half million. Two million. One million.

Those are the workers that would be affected by this legislation which we proposed.

Now why aren't we getting any action? I will tell you why: I see before me a sign which says: "Organizing Is Everybody's Job. Abolish Taft-Hartley and Right-To-Work Laws."

In 1954 the President of the United States suggested, recommended to Congress, presented a bill to Congress, to make certain changes in the Taft-Hartley law. That request was reiterated in 1955, in 1956, and nothing has happened.

My position on the right-to-work laws is well known. But I think to get this picture of why, why nothing is happening on this proper labor legislation which we have in the House and Senate, I think we ought to talk a little bit about the right to work.

Where do these right-to-work laws exist, and how do they affect—and how do they affect—congressional thinking on other types of labor legislation?

Let me run down—it won't take a minute—the list of the political composition of the legislatures in the States with the right-to-work laws in alphabetical order:

Alabama, Democrat; Arizona, Democrat; Arkansas, Democrat; Florida, Democrat; Georgia, Democrat; Iowa, Republican; Louisiana, Democrat; Mississippi, Democrat; Nebraska, Republican; Nevada, Democrat; North Carolina, Democrat; North Dakota, nonpartisan; South Carolina, Democrat; South Dakota, Republican; Tennessee, Democrat; Texas, Democrat; Utah, Republican; Virginia, Democrat.

Thirteen legislatures Democrat, four Republican, one nonpartisan.

Now let's take a look at the congressional composition, the present composition of the congressional delegation from these 18 States with right-to-work laws: The total Democratic Congressmen and Senators, 114. The total Republican Congressmen and Senators, 37.

Now, how can you and I expect reasonably sympathetic approach to legislation which benefits the workingmen and women of this country with that record? How can we expect it? I tell you, ladies and gentlemen, that I say that your job and mine in terms of those elements in this country which are antilabor is to exercise what Sidney Hillman called our political freedom. [Applause.] So I ask with all of the force that I can: How can one say that this administration is not in favor of the workingman, with this record of accomplishment, this record of legislation which is blocked in the House and the Senate by the Democratic leadership? And all you have to do to document it is to look at the right-to-work States and where they are.

I want to thank you for listening to me. I appreciate very much the cordiality and the interest that you have shown. I want to say again that so long as I am in office—and I know I will have the opportunity of being in office for another 4 years [laughter]—so long as I am here, you will find me on your side. [Applause.] You will find me fighting for your legitimate rights, and you will find me working as closely as they will allow me—and they do—with your national officers. You will find me fighting every inch of the way for the thing that you and I are primarily interested in, which is the welfare of the workers of the United States. [Applause.]

Congressman Harley O. Staggers

OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, last spring, in answer to students' inquiries, I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my idea of the average Congressman. I chose from among the Members of the House of Representatives my colleague, HARLEY O. STAGGERS, of the Second Congressional District of West Virginia. Since that time, several things have happened in the ordinary work-a-day life of Congressman STAGGERS that I think should be brought to your attention in order to complete the record of the achievements of this Congressman.

Culminating years of hard work, Congressman STAGGERS has been instrumental in having authorized a new Federal building in Martinsburg, W. Va., to house the post office and the Federal court. It is estimated that the cost of this building will be approximately $1,500,000.

Through the efforts of the second district Congressman, a bill has been put through Congress for the relief of the city of Elkins from an airport indebtedness.

Another project which adds to Congressman Staggers' credit is the establishment of a fish hatchery in his district. He has diligently pushed through the House of Representatives a bill which will provide a $600,000 Federal fish hatchery in the second district which will supply the streams throughout the national forests in West Virginia and some of the streams in adjoining States. This bill provides a maintenance fund of $100,000 yearly.

Your average Congressman has also had enacted by Congress a resolution authorizing $30,000 for planning and surveying of the Greenbrier River in Marlinton, W. Va.

A definite decision has now been made to locate the Radio Astronomy Center, to which I referred in my previous speech, in Pocahontas County, W. Va.; $3,500,000 has been earmarked to start this project. STAGGERS played a large part in seeing that the funds were appropriated and earmarked for this project.

In addition to major achievements, the Congressman is daily working for the best interest of America and the good of the people.

He has helped thousands of people and works on every problem just as if it were his own. He makes hundreds of speeches yearly and is always available when needed.

Information Fact Sheet on the American Legion

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, any legislation which comes before the House must finally be decided on its own merits alone. To merit our approval a bill must be sound in purpose. Its results must be necessary as well as worth while.

Normally I would be content to address myself only to the provisions of a bill. I would rest my case solely on the merits of the proposed legislation.

In the recent debate on the veterans security bill it was necessary to consider the character and integrity and history of service of its sponsor and principal supporter—the American Legion.

The American Legion's proud record of service for God and country has been ignored by those who charge the Legion with being a "Treasury-raiding" organization.

There is room for honest differences of opinion as to the relative importance of the various provisions of this bill to liberalize existing veteran compensation and pension benefits. I, for one, believe that the Federal Government has a responsibility to insure that disabled and aging veterans who are unable to work because of their disabilities or unable to obtain a job because of their age, and who have little or no income, should not be left destitute. I believe, too, that the Federal Government has a responsibility to insure that those who were disabled in the service of our Nation, their dependents and the survivors of deceased veterans are adequately cared for. Most important, I believe that our Nation and our economy will continue to grow and prosper so that this obligation can be met in the future as well as it is being met today.

This belief, which is shared by the American Legion, scarcely warrants the charge of "Treasury Raider." Yet, nearly three million American Legionnaires have been so branded by some opposed to this bill.

Such a charge is unjustified both in terms of the legislation now being considered and in terms of the American Legion's unequalled record of service for others.

I challenge anyone to show me an organization that has done more for the welfare of all of our people and of our entire Nation than the American Legion.

There is none.

In whatever field of service one may choose, the American Legion is in the forefront.

Consider for a moment the veterans' legislation enacted by the United States Congress since the American Legion was chartered by an act of Congress on September 16, 1919; the American Legion has been in the thick of every legislative battle for the improvement of conditions for disabled veterans and their dependents.

As recently as 37 years ago there was no Veterans' Administration. The American Legion led the fight for creation of this agency. It has been the watchdog of its operations. It has been its most constructive critic. There are few who do not recognize that the establishment and improvement of VA have resulted in a much more efficient and much more economical administration of veterans benefits enacted by Congress.

Is this Treasury-raiding?

After World War I there was no hospital and medical program for disabled veterans. The American Legion fought to make this program the finest of its kind in the world today. Is this Treasury-raiding?

I am confident that future historians will some day credit Congress with writing one of the most beneficial, constructive, far-sighted laws in the history of America or any other nation when it enacted the GI bill of rights in June 1944. The American Legion was the architect of this legislation. Was the American Legion raiding the Treasury when it helped write into law a program whose ultimate value to our Nation and to our people no one can now measure?

Going beyond the field of legislation into the area of direct service to the Nation and to our people, we come to the American Legion's programs of Veterans Rehabilitation, Child Welfare, National Security, and Americanism.

Veterans rehabilitation to the American Legion means more than sponsoring and supporting legislation of needed benefit for veterans. It means helping veterans obtain these available benefits which they need and to which they are entitled.

Each year the American Legion spends millions of dollars on the National, State, and local level processing veterans' claims, helping sick and disabled veterans obtain the hospital and medical care they need, assisting veterans with insurance, disability, housing, education, and other matters, and doing the other things which must be done before a veteran can receive authorized benefits.

Nearly a million dollars are spent by the Legion each year to operate its national rehabilitation service alone. In addition, there are more than 1,100 accredited Legion representatives in VA regional offices, hospitals, clinics, and other installations throughout the country; a service officer in each of the American Legion's more than 17,000 posts is ready and willing to help any veteran with any problem he may have.

Let me emphasize that this service is available to any veteran, regardless of whether he is a member of the American Legion or even eligible for membership in the Legion.

The American Legion, through its veterans' rehabilitation program, has contributed $50,000 to the Heart Fund, an equal amount for NP research, and additional funds for other medical purposes. It has made available to the Government the advice and services of its expert medical, insurance, and claims advisory personnel.

These are but a few of the positive ways in which the American Legion is serving others without recourse to the Federal Government or any other agency, which means, of course, that this is being done with Legion dues and contributions, not Federal or State funds.

In the field of child welfare, the American Legion has during the past 31 years spent more than $125 million to provide direct aid for children in need. In 1955 the Legion's child-welfare program cost that organization more than $7,300,000.

The money spent by the Legion has bought everything from food, clothes, and shelter to iron lungs, prosthetic appliances, and miracle drugs. But the story of this child-welfare program cannot be told in terms of money alone. It must be told, too, in terms of the hundreds of thousands of hours devoted to the care of children each year by the more than 50,000 trained workers in this field in the American Legion and its auxiliary. And it must be told in terms of the children made healthy, the families kept together, and the constructive, farsighted child laws on the statute books today because of the determination and support of the American Legion.

The American Legion's record in the field of national security further refutes the baseless charge of "Treasury-Raider." It is only necessary to review the history of our Nation since World War I to realize that up until very recently, the American Legion was one of the few organizations in the country which steadfastly opposed our lack of military preparedness.

Is there anyone today who would question that the American Legion has been interested only in the welfare and security of our country in urging a strong program of military preparedness? Is there anyone who would question that such American Legion sponsored and supported laws as the Uniform Code of Military Justice, the Federal Civil Defense Act, the various National Security Acts, and other defense measures are in the best interests of our country?

Individual Legionnaires have given freely of their time and effort to serve on Selective Service boards, with civil defense units, and other defense agencies.

A few days ago on Flag Day, June 14, the American Legion demonstrated another facet of its positive, constructive programs for the good of America. In front of the east entrance to the United States Capitol, the American Legion conducted an inspiring Flag-Day program. Some of our colleagues in the Senate and House were privileged to represent the Congress on this program. They can tell you what this patriotic observance of the birthday of our flag meant to them and to the millions of our fellow citizens who watched it on a national television program that morning.

Americanism is one of the American Legion's most important and most comprehensive programs. If it is a Treasury-raiding program, it is only because the American Legion drains its own treasury to finance such magnificent activities as Boys State and Boys Nation, the annual, nationwide oratorical contest, the sponsorship of Boy Scout troops, and American Legion junior baseball.

Each year the American Legion spends approximately $1 million to teach young men of America about the functions of their State and Federal Governments through Boys State and Boys Nation. Some 20,000 boys participate in this program annually.

The oratorical contest gives more than 350,000 high school boys each year an opportunity to learn about our Constitution and Bill of Rights. Essays are written on these precious documents by the contestants. Many youngsters, who otherwise could not have gone to college, have had a college education because of the scholarships they won in the American Legion's oratorical contest. And every participant has gained a greater understanding and appreciation of those documents that are the foundation of our democratic form of government.

Is this the kind of activity which merits unthinking, caustic criticism?

Currently, more than 175,000 future leaders of our Nation are members of the 4,128 Boy Scout Troops sponsored by the American Legion. Since the Legion began sponsoring these troops, more than one million Boy Scouts have benefited from the wonderful moral and physical training which scouting gave them.

If baseball is America's national pastime, then the American Legion is one of the cornerstones of the country through its unequaled junior baseball program.

This largest, organized, teen-age activity in the Nation started in Milbank, S. Dak., in 1925. It became a national program in 1926. During the past 30 years, at least 20 million boys have played American Legion junior baseball.

Nearly 20,000 league teams take part annually in this program. More than one million boys play American Legion junior baseball each year. In addition to the 20,000 teams playing in league competition, other teams are sponsored by Legion Posts to give more boys a chance to play junior baseball. This accounts for the total of one million boys.

American Legion junior baseball has been the proving grounds for the major and minor leagues. Since World War II it has given the major leagues 60 percent of their players. Last year alone, 264 players on the 16 major league teams were graduates of American Legion junior baseball.

But this is an incidental benefit of the program. The real value of American Legion junior baseball and the reason the Legion spends upward of $1,200,000 each year on this activity is that it teaches young Americans the importance of teamwork and of sportsmanship as one of the cornerstones of good citizenship.

These are but some of the unpublicized, unselfish, day-to-day programs of the American Legion.

They do not rate headlines. But they do prove that the American Legion, far from being a Treasury-raiding organization, is one of the greatest forces for good our Nation has ever known.

The American Legion fights hard for what it believes in. But it fights fairly. And win, lose or draw, it continues to carry out its many programs of service for God and country.

So the next time somebody accuses the American Legion of being a Treasury-raiding organization because he disagrees with a Legion-sponsored bill for the benefit of veterans, remember what the Legion is doing for the welfare of others.

If every organization which comes before the Congress in support of or opposition to one bill or another were doing as much, you and I could rest easy about the future security and welfare of our Nation.

Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN E. HENDERSON
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal about the position of small business in our country today and there are among us the conjurers of gloom who, in their frenzied search for political issues, have hit upon the idea that they can sell the American people the bill of goods that the present administration in Washington is not interested in the fate of the small businesses of our country. This is plain balderdash.

Today small-business concerns, in general, are much better off than they were in the early part of 1953 when President Eisenhower took office. This improvement has been accomplished despite the more highly competitive civilian markets of the past 2 years. In addition, much progress has been made in solving the problems encountered by small business in particular areas such as financing, Government procurement, protection from monopolies and discriminatory practices in the market place.

OUR RECORD ECONOMY

Our economy is currently operating at record levels, far above anything contemplated by even the most optimistic persons 10 or even 5 years ago. The first 3 months of 1956 show total goods and services—the gross national product—produced in the United States as reaching an annual rate of $403.4 billion, an all-time high. A record number of business concerns participated in supplying this amount of goods and services—they now number more than 4,252,000. Our total labor force is at a new high of 67,846,000, while average weekly earnings for workers in manufacturing concerns reached $78.40 in May of this year. A new high in average weekly earnings of $79.52 was reached in November of last year.

Our economy, therefore, is in a period of prosperity with the people of the United States enjoying the highest standard of living ever experienced in our history or anywhere in the world. We Republicans are proud of this record, particularly when the goods and services produced by our economy may be enjoyed during a time of peace.

Small-business concerns have participated in and have contributed to this prosperous economy. While small firms suffered a decline in sales and profits during the Korean war period, the trend was reversed within a few months after the end of hostilities in 1953. Since that time there has been a steady increase in both the sales and profits of small business. The conversion from the Korean period to an essentially peacetime economy was accomplished with a minimum disturbance to our economy.

Small-business concerns depend upon a high level of economic activity and upon a large demand for civilian goods and services. It may be noted that from 1952 to the first quarter of 1956, Federal purchasing of goods and services was reduced from $54.3 billion to $45.7 billion. During this same period, personal consumption expenditures—the things we all buy in our daily living—increased from $218.3 billion to $258.8 billion. This means that small businesses are currently better able to participate and to prosper in the markets of today.

We recognize that while small business in general is better off today than it was in 1953, individual firms do still experience difficulties in their efforts to secure long-term credit, to compete against monopolistic or discriminatory practices in the civilian market and in some other areas. These are not new problems. They were certainly not created by the Republican administration. What is important is that under the direction of President Eisenhower, the several agencies of the Federal Government are making strong and conscientious efforts to remove these obstacles to effective competition by small-business concerns.

BUSINESS FAILURES AND MERGERS

Much has been said by our New Deal and Fair Deal critics about the high rate of business mergers with increased concentration in big business and about the high rate of business failures. Two things should be pointed out about the concentration of economic power and business mergers. The first is that big business normally benefits far more during periods of wartime or defense production than does the small business. We all remember the thousands of small businesses that have been casualties in our last two wars. We also remember the controls which brought on this economic strangulation during our recent war years. Big business received a tremendous impetus during World War II and the Korean period. The factors which brought this about may be an unavoidable adjunct of war, but I suggest that the other party remember its share in the responsibility for the administration of controls during this period.

For many years, New Dealers have vilified our larger business enterprises and wept crocodile tears for our small concerns. "Robber Barons," "Economic Royalists" are all part of the New Deal's colorful language contrived to get votes. I believe the American people are tired of such baseless foolishness. Bigness is not bad per se. It is bad if it causes unfair competition or is used to foster monopolies. In this event, we are protected by our antitrust enforcement agencies which under the Eisenhower administration have been vigorous in protecting our free enterprise system from monopolistic encroachment. From the number of actions by the antitrust enforcement agencies in this administration, we soon see that the Republican administration has been far more vigilant in policing our economy than were its predecessors.

I believe it is important that we understand the true picture of business failures. The New Dealers have looked long and hard for campaign issues—it appears that the best they can come up with is the fact that some small businesses fail to make the grade. I am as much concerned as the next man when the local tailor, hardware store or shoe store has to close its doors. We hope that every man can succeed in his endeavor. However, the business failure rate today is not high. Let us not forget that during 1955 there were 374,000 new businesses started, or over 1,000 a day. This tremendous incentive to compete in today's market resulted in a record number of business firms in our economy totaling 4,252,000.

I wish to state most emphatically that trying to compare what happens during a peacetime economy, such as we have at present, with the experience of an economy geared to war is sheer nonsense. As a matter of fact, since 1940 we cannot find any normal year for the purpose of comparison. From 1941 to 1945 we had World War II; from 1946 to 1948 we had a reconversion period with all sorts of economic shocks as a tremendous backlog of demand on the part of consumers developed. From 1950 to 1952 we had the Korean emergency and finally in 1953 we had a short period of relatively stable reconversion and the demand for new products to satisfy the wants of consumers. We find, therefore, that 1954 and 1955 are actually the only normal peacetime years in the last decade and a half.

In 1954 we find that there were slightly over 11,000 business failures or at the rate of 42 per 10,000 business enterprises. In 1955 there were slightly under 11,000 business failures or at the rate of 41.6 per 10,000 business enterprises. This rate is considerably less than three New Deal years, 1939–41, which were normal years and which experienced a failure rate of 63 per 10,000 firms. It is also much less than the long-run average of 70 per 10,000 firms for the period 1900 to 1955. This rate is more characteristic of our business experience during this century. On this basis I certainly do not feel that the current business failure rate is out of proportion with our historical experience.

While I am, of course, concerned over the failure of any business enterprise, I firmly believe that we may have confidence in our competitive system when so many thousands of new businesses are being started each year. Certainly, this best illustrates that the citizens of our country have not lost faith in the opportunities which exist today or in their ability to compete with firms which are not only large but which have had many years of successful operation.

PROFITS OF SMALL FIRMS

Using all of the figures available to us, we find that as far as small manufacturing corporations are concerned, there was a significant loss in their financial position during the period 1947–52. Earnings before taxes declined from $1,885 million to $1,347 million or 28.5 percent. Similarly, earnings after taxes declined from $1,096 million to $610 million or 44.3 percent.

During this same period, 1947–52, sales of the large corporations increased from $144,290 million to $219,758 million, or 52.3 percent. Earnings before taxes of this group increased from $14,589 million to $18,877 million or 29.4 percent. Their earnings after taxes decreased 9.5 percent. Compare this to the 44 percent decline of small corporations.

Now what has happened during the Republican administration? For nearly 2 years there has been an improvement in the financial position of small manufacturing corporations as well as the large.

In the years 1954 and 1955, earnings before taxes of the small corporations increased 31.8 percent compared with 36.7 percent for the large corporations, but the percentage of increase of earnings after taxes of the smaller corporations was greater, 39.8, compared with 34.2 percent for the large firms.

WHAT THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION HAS DONE

Now, what efforts has the Eisenhower administration put forth to help create a climate in which small business can prosper? Let us look briefly at the work of various Federal agencies whose programs have assisted the small-business concerns in our economy.

The Small Business Administration was established by the Republican 83d Congress, as the first independent, peacetime agency to render assistance to small firms. This agency actually serves as the chief proponent of small business in the executive branch of the Government and has programs in operation which are designed to help small business. Each year since 1953 has seen increasing activity in these fields. Since the inception of the agency and through June of this year, the Small Business Administration had approved 3,560 loans to business concerns for a total of $165,691,000. These loans have gone to virtually every type of legitimate enterprise, local drug and hardware stores, feed and implement dealers, small machine shops, taxicab and bus companies, and others. The SBA also has approved some 4,552 disaster loans to businessmen and homeowners who suffered damage because of hurricanes, floods, and other catastrophes. As a matter of fact, the loans made during the past fiscal year more than doubled those of the previous fiscal year.

This was the Republican answer—legitimate credit for small business, replacing the scandal-ridden Reconstruction Finance Corporation which spread loans to huge corporations and was so subject to political influence in the previous administration. Let me also say here that the SBA does not seek to compete with private lending institutions. It is not a Government superbank. It does, however, provide sound loans, often in participation with private lenders, when banks cannot make the loan on sufficiently long terms or for other legitimate reasons which would deny credit to small businesses.

Not all the agency's efforts in rendering financial assistance, however, are resolved by the making of a loan. Frequently SBA financial specialists can advise an individual as to changes of operation so that a loan is no longer necessary or so the businessman can secure the credit he needs from his local bank.

The Small Business Administration has agreements with other Government agencies which buy goods and services such as the Department of Defense, the Veterans' Administration, and the Department of Agriculture whereby all or certain portions of particular Government purchase contracts will be set aside for exclusive bidding by small firms. This means that on Government contracts suitable for performance by small business, small firms will be assured of an opportunity to compete. As of June 30, 1956, $1,112 million in set-asides for small business had been agreed to by procurement agencies. Here, again, the SBA has been increasing its efforts to assist small business. Each fiscal year finds many more millions of dollars in Government purchases reserved for exclusive award to small firms.

Other Small Business Administration programs in operation assist small firms to place their names on Government bidders' lists, to obtain specifications and bid sets; to learn of prime and subcontracting opportunities; and to acquire the latest information on managerial and technical subjects.

The administrator of SBA recently disclosed that Small Business Administration field office reports during fiscal year 1956 showed that prime contract opportunities referred to small firms resulted in contract awards totaling $332,567,000; counseling on selling to the Government and related problems was provided to 30,139 small companies; 88,857 prime and subcontract opportunity referrals were made to small firms; and Government contracting officers were furnished names and addresses of 7,265 small firms which could supply items for which additional small business competition for Government contracts was needed to obtain more suitable prices.

The Republican founders of the Small Business Administration envisioned it as a one-stop agency to which firms could turn, particularly in their dealings with the Government without encountering the redtape, brush-off, and run-around which had so long been associated with the attitude of the Federal Government from 1933 to 1953.

I believe that the several programs of the Small Business Administration have been of material assistance to the small business concerns of this Nation. Because I believe that such valuable assistance has been rendered, I have, during this Congress, supported all legislative proposals and requests for appropriations dealing with the Small Business Administration. I have also noted a tendency on the part of the other party to discredit and belittle this agency.

Other agencies in the Federal Government have during the past 3 years given increased recognition to the needs of small business in their own particular programs.

As I have said, the economic welfare of the small-business concern is, to a large extent, dependent upon the vigorous enforcement of our antitrust laws—for with free, open, and fair competition the small firm may successfully compete against its large competitors. The record of antitrust enforcement under the Eisenhower administration is a commendable record. New vigor and insight on the part of the enforcement agencies have created a record of accomplishment superior to that of either of the two previous administrations.

The efforts of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission have been directed toward the speedier handling of cases and the prosecution of hard-core violations. I am informed that during the 10 years from 1944 through 1953, the FTC brought an average of only 111 complaints each year. In fiscal 1954, this jumped to 123, in fiscal 1955 to 161, and at the present rate, fiscal 1956 will see more than 170 complaints issued. In final orders by the Commission, the same stepped-up action is revealed. From an average of 96 orders for companies to cease unfair trade practices each year between 1944–53, 104 were issued in 1954, and 1955 produced 112. Fiscal 1956, with 94 orders already issued, is certain to surpass last year's record.

The Eisenhower administration has a much better record of antitrust enforcement than its New Deal predecessors despite all of the lip service to the contrary. The Antitrust Division of the Justice Department under our administration has instituted well over 100 suits against antitrust violators; whereas, in 1952 under a Democrat administration, 30 new antitrust cases were filed; in 1953 under the Republican Administration, 33 new proceedings were brought; and in 1955, a total of 54 new cases were begun.

In the 62 years since the passage of the Sherman Antitrust Act by a Republican controlled Congress, 26 contempt proceedings have been brought for violation of outstanding decrees—one-third of these were brought in the 3 years since the present Republican administration took office. In all areas of antitrust law enforcement, strengthened and more expeditious treatment of cases has resulted. Every means is being used to assure small firms the full protection under the law.

Many small firms sell to the Federal Government and do so in direct competition with the largest business concerns in the country. When so many billions of dollars of goods and services are being purchased each year it is most important that small firms are accorded every opportunity to compete. It has long been the expressed intent of Congress that small business should receive a fair share of Government purchases and in the past 3 years every effort has been made by the procurement agencies to see that the will of Congress is carried out.

I have already mentioned the beneficial results derived from agreements between the Small Business Administration and Government procurement agencies. Additionally, these agencies themselves have small-business specialists and small-business programs. The figures show that small firms have received a larger share of military procurement in the past 2 years than under the so-called Fair Deal administration.

For fiscal years 1954 and 1955 small business received an average of almost 24 percent while in the 3 most recent Democrat fiscal years they received an average of 18 percent. Similarly, the percentage of contracts awarded through secret negotiation by the Government has decreased during the past 2 fiscal years. In other words, Government buying is being brought out in the open where all business firms can compete fairly.

I believe that the agencies responsible for procurement activities will increase their efforts to assure small business a larger share of Government purchases and will eliminate obstacles to providing small firms full information on proposed purchases, contract administration, and other areas in which small business has a vital interest.

For 20 years, the Federal Government proceeded unimpeded toward becoming a bureaucratic colossus. Empires were built within the Federal structure. The Government arrogantly embarked on all sorts of business-type ventures in competition with the legitimate pursuits of private enterprise. Thus, the Government became a high-cost producer of many items, insensitive to the competitive forces which operate in the American economy to keep prices low. The American taxpayer not only paid the difference, but also suffered increased taxes since the Government was denied the corporate tax revenues which the companies holding Government contracts for such work would pay. This is certainly a form of socialism which often damaged small businesses because of the type of functions that would have been undertaken had this work been contracted for with private industry.

The Republican administration has been quick to disband these schemes. Scores of such activities have been abandoned since 1953, although the opposition Congress of the past 2 years has erected roadblocks in this Republican program.

I have mentioned Socialist tendencies, and I wish to add that a fully socialized economy is far easier to accomplish if production is concentrated in the hands of a relatively few large enterprises. As in Great Britain several years ago, a socialistic government can assume control of private industry more easily when the assumption of control results from taking over a few large industrial organizations. This is why anyone who opposes Socialist ideology must believe strongly that small business must be preserved and fostered in a free-enterprise system.

The Eisenhower administration knows that small business is the essential blood and nerve system of our economic body if free enterprise is to be a vital, dynamic force. It knows that avenues of opportunity for small business to grow are necessary to the functioning of free enterprise. It knows and has demonstrated through its intelligently conceived policies that both large and small business are required and must be balanced carefully in Government policies so that both can be stimulated.

In order to assure that the small-business segment of our economy receives the most assistance possible within the proper sphere of Federal Government activities, and as further evidence of his concern for small business, President Eisenhower recently established a Cabinet Committee on Small Business. This Committee will, in the words of the President:

> Make specific recommendations for administrative action, and, where necessary for additional legislation, to strengthen economic position of small business and to foster their sound development.

Through vigorous enforcement of our antitrust laws the Republican administration has endeavored to assure small firms an opportunity to compete with all businesses adhering to the rules of the game. In particular areas where small firms habitually encountered more difficulty than larger businesses, the Eisenhower administration has made every effort to strengthen its programs which can provide assistance to individual small-business concerns.

But, above all, I believe that the greatest service has been rendered small firms by respecting individual initiative and resourcefulness and by making every effort to maintain a flourishing and prosperous economy in which all businessmen may participate. I believe we can all have faith in the strength of the thousands of small-business concerns throughout the country. We also can be assured that President Eisenhower and his administration will continue to render all assistance necessary.

I personally pledge myself to continue to support in Congress every legislative measure which will honestly serve to benefit small business and assure that it continues to provide the vital and driving force in our economy. Then, I believe, all of our people will reap the benefits from a sound, flourishing free Nation.

Colgate Answers the Plight of the Private College

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. STERLING COLE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, certainly it is not necessary for me to remind this body of the series of crises facing private higher education in our country today. A combination of rising costs and reduced purchasing power is each year placing our independent colleges in an increasingly difficult position.

I do, however, rise to tell you with great pride what one institution, Colgate University, in Hamilton, N. Y.—my own alma mater—is doing through the efforts of its alumni and friends to solve its problems. Perhaps the example of Colgate will prompt and assist others to do likewise.

Colgate University has always been seriously undercapitalized, both in endowment funds—income from which helps to defray the 40 percent more it costs to educate a student that he pays in tuition—and in available sources for important improvement and replacement of its physical plant. Never the recipient of State, National, or other public funds, or of large gifts from individual philanthropists, Colgate has had to make its own way financially. That it has built itself into a vital national institution while developing and maintaining the highest academic standards, is a tribute to those who have believed in the college, and have worked hard for it.

To meet today's problems, Colgate first took careful stock of all of its needs and resources, particularly in relation to the position it is determined to play in the future of American higher education. Then it listed those needs on a priority basis and made long-range plans to satisfy them.

For the most pressing of these, it planned a campaign among alumni, parents of students, and friends, to raise $3,300,000 in capital funds. This was to be used for the endowment of faculty salaries—in the light of all that has been written, I need hardly remind you of the desperate need that exists here if our colleges are to maintain their high standards of classroom teaching—for a new library to house its excellent collection of books and pamphlets, including the printed material issued by our own Government; and for the William A. Reid Athletic Center, honoring the great leader and a great friend of all Colgate men.

Colgate turns to alumni, parents, and friends, for these funds because the officers and trustees of Colgate University believe strongly that they cannot ask others for help unless they have done everything possible to help themselves. They also believe that every man has three great duties to be recognized when he apportions his philanthropic dollar—duty to church, duty to charity, and duty to education.

Furthermore, the university has enlisted the loyal support of its alumni in conducting the campaign. In each of the larger centers where Colgate men live, an alumni chairman has organized captains and workers—matched by a similar organization among parents, who have been most generous and faithful in supporting their adopted college—who are calling on other alumni to obtain gifts.

Today, the campaign has passed the halfway mark, with more than $1,800,000 subscribed; it is this fall entering its second phase. This is focused on the week of September 24—September 29, designated as Homecoming Week, and lying between Founders' Day, set aside annually to honor the 13 men who founded the university in 1819; and Homecoming, when Colgate meets its traditional rival, Cornell, in football on its homefield. This game, I might add, will be televised over NBC stations, and will be seen here in Washington as well as in New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

During this week, workers will call on every alumnus in their areas who has not subscribed to the fund and give them an opportunity to send in their pledges. This will also hold true for parents. Those who live in scattered areas where there can be no such organization will receive a mail appeal, enclosing a pledge card and asking them to make sure that their gifts are included in the total which will be announced during the Homecoming celebration. This total, I know, will be an impressive one.

This, as I said, is what one American college is doing to meet the serious situation which confronts higher education. Because of the nature of the campaign—its reliance on alumni, parents, and friends for gifts and for the organization conducting the appeal—it might well be termed "Operation Bootstrap."

Certainly it is most commendable for such an institution to insist on finding its own way out of its financial difficulties. I am sure you will agree with me that Colgate has set a fine example. She scorns to palm the public purse and true to her rich heritage remains proud, independent, self-reliant and, above all, reverent. I am proud of Colgate University.

A Fair Deal for the Small-Family Farmer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALVIN E. O'KONSKI
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is a disappointment to me that this Congress did not bring about a happier solution to the serious farm problem. It is tragic that politics entered into our deliberations.

It is too bad that the Senate delayed until a political year to approach the problem. The House approached it in 1955, a nonpolitical year. If the Senate had followed suit, I believe we could have accomplished more.

I want the record to show that politics never entered my mind in legislating for the farmer. If a bill was good for the small-family farmer, I did not care whether it was a Democratic or a Republican bill. If it was good for the small-family farmer, it got my support and vote.

If a bill was bad for the small-family farmer, I did not care whether it was a Republican or Democratic bill—I worked against it and voted against it. The farm problem is not a political problem with me. It is a serious national problem, and politics should be omitted.

In all my years here I am proud of the fact that I never played politics with the farmers' misery. Whether it was Democratic or Republican did not enter my thinking. What effect it would have on the farmers' welfare was my only consideration.

I know from what is going on that the farmers' problems are not going to be solved by politics. The Democratic South in control under Democrats never did give the dairy farmer much of a break. They gave as little as possible—and just enough to get their program through. Their concern is oleo—not dairying.

The Eastern Republicans believe in subsidies for everyone but the farmer. The combination of these two is responsible for the breakdown of dairy farm legislation. For any farmer to blindly follow party is defeating his own cause. The farmer should vote for men—not politics. It's the type of men you send to Congress, and not the party in control, that is going to solve the farm problem.

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS FOOD PRODUCTS

I was the first Member of Congress to introduce a bill, away back in 1945, to set up a plan of disposition of surplus dairy and other food products. That was when the war ended. That was the time to solve the surplus problem. It was folly to wait until the surplus ran out of our ears.

This bill set up a plan for the school-lunch program, school-milk program, food for the aged, the disabled, the veterans, and needy countries of the world.

Progress on this bill has been slow, but little by little it is being adopted. For instance, last year Wisconsin got the following from the Federal Government:

School-lunch program: In 1,696 schools with 157,704 children participating (22 percent of 717,836 schoolchildren—Federal funds allocated to Wisconsin were $1,375,046). Most meals served were complete lunches; children pay part.

School-milk program: In 2,468 schools; Federal expenditure in Wisconsin was $968,000 last year.

Direct distribution program: Foods donated to schoolchildren and needy persons in institutions and family units totaled 3,760,000 pounds at a cost of $1,545,000 in Wisconsin last year.

Foreign nations: The amount of food the Federal Government disposed of to needy people in other nations amounted to over a billion dollars last year.

As a result of my efforts and the efforts of others like me, the school-lunch program, the school-milk program, the food to the needy in our Nation and the foreign-aid food program will be greatly increased in the coming year.

Slow but sure, the bill I introduced away back in 1945 is being adopted. If this bill had been adopted in 1945, the surplus-food problem would not be with us today.

SOCIAL SECURITY

When I addressed the farmers at hundreds of meetings 2 years ago, I told them that I introduced bills to reduce the social-security eligibility age for women to 62 years, and to pay social security to the disabled, regardless of age.

I am happy to report that progress has been made on these bills. The bill to reduce the eligibility age for women to 62 passed both Houses. The disabled will be able to draw social security at age 50, in a bill passed by both Houses.

It may interest you to know that I was the first Member of Congress to introduce a bill—in 1943—to make farmers eligible for coverage under the social-security program. What a break the farmers would have gotten if the bill had been adopted in 1943, when I first introduced it so that the farm income during war years could have been used as a basis for social-security payments.

WHY I SUPPORT 90 PERCENT OF PARITY FOR DAIRY FARMERS

I have always supported 90 percent of parity for dairy farmers because I believe that the way to reduce production is to guarantee a dairy farmer a good income. A dairy farmer's costs are fixed. He has expenses that are inescapable. If he cannot pay his bills with 20 milk cows he will milk 25 or 30.

If he wants to stay in business his income will determine how many cows he will milk. Lowering his income below 90 percent of parity will force him to milk more cows to get the needed income. That is the mistake in Benson's thinking.

This is why I felt it was a mistake to drop 90 percent of parity for dairying. This is why I introduced an amendment to keep 90 percent of parity for dairy products. But the Democrats of the South and Benson supporters licked my amendment. Notice it was a combination of southern Democrats and Benson supporters who defeated it.

WHY I SUPPORTED 90 PERCENT OF PARITY INSTEAD OF THE SOIL-BANK PROGRAM

The soil-bank program will not noticeably help the Wisconsin dairy farmer. It is a shame that this $1,200,000,000 expenditure will not noticeably help Wisconsin. Wisconsin dairy farmers cannot afford to take land out of production. To pasture and feed the increased number of cows they must milk to make ends meet, they cannot qualify for any real part of the $1,200,000,000 program.

The soil-bank program will enrich the large corporation farms that have thousands of acres. It will not help small Wisconsin dairy farmers. While Wisconsin farmers will get pennies, the large corporation farms will get thousands of dollars.

The 90-percent parity program would help all Wisconsin dairy farmers—and particularly the small-family farmers. And the 90-percent parity program would cost the taxpayers less than the $1,200,000,000 soil-bank program.

That is why I voted for the 90-percent parity program. A good soil conservation program with 90 percent of parity on limited production is the best answer to the problems of the small-family farmer. As it now stands, the small-family farmer is still in desperate circumstances. The farmer who needs help the most gets the least.

YOU HELP THE NATION WHEN YOU HELP THE DAIRY FARMER

Dairying accounts for more farm income than any other farm crop. In 1954, total dairy income was $5½ billion. In the same year, income from wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts altogether was only $7½ billion. Every crop is important, but only dairying is a crop in every State in the Union.

Since dairy farmers are everywhere, we help the whole Nation and every State in the Union when we help the dairy farmer. This cannot be said for any other farm crop. We would do the whole Nation a great service if we consider the welfare of dairying first above any other crop.

No farm crop deserves to be considered basic before dairying. What affects dairying affects the Nation. Yet the southern Democrats and eastern Republicans never permitted dairying to be classed as a basic industry. The most extensive farm industry is cast aside for peanuts and rice. It would be a great Congress except for southern Democrats and eastern Republicans.

MY ATTENDANCE RECORD

Largely because of the lack of balance between city and farm income, I saw to it that I was present each day Congress met in the past session. It is difficult to achieve, but the record shows I did not miss a single day that Congress was in session.

I was hopeful that more could be done to up farm income to balance it with city income. I am recorded as voting on every bill on which there was a rollcall. Every vote I cast was always on the side of the small-family farmer. Never did I vote against him.

To answer all the mail and other things a Congressman must do, it is difficult to have a perfect attendance record in Congress. Yet, I did accomplish just that. For the farmers' interests I did all humanly possible. There just weren't enough of us here. I repeat it is not party but men who will solve the farm problem.

Dr. Townsend and Social Security

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE M. RHODES
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RHODES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the final approval this week by the Congress of amendments to the social-security law is a big step forward in social insurance for the people of our country.

It is another step toward the goal envisioned by Dr. Francis E. Townsend, who pioneered for a plan to bring economic freedom, dignity, respect, and security to the old folks of this Nation. His proposal which became known as the Townsend plan gave inspiration and hope for the past score or more years to millions of senior citizens throughout the Nation.

Dr. Townsend was appalled at the sight of poverty in the midst of plenty. He saw how the Hoover depression brought dire hardship to millions of people. Old folks then were especially affected by privation and despair. Many of them rallied under the leadership of Dr. Townsend in a fight for social justice. The Townsend plan was proposed to abolish poverty and to bring lasting prosperity to all Americans as well as justice and security to elderly folks.

Much of the credit for the progress that has been made in social insurance is the result of Dr. Townsend's pioneering efforts for old-age pensions or for what he now refers to as a plan for national insurance.

Dr. Townsend's plan has been presented in many Congresses but has never reached the floor of Congress. It has been introduced again in this 84th Congress, 163 Members of the House have signed a discharge petition to bring the bill to the floor for debate and action.

This support gives evidence that many Members of Congress see the need for consideration and action on legislation which goes much further than the present social security law and beyond the amendments which were finally approved by Congress this week.

The Townsendites were not dismayed by the powerful opposition they faced. They continue to press for the Townsend plan—a program that will adequately meet the needs of all elderly folks. Even the modest improvements just made in the social-security law by this Congress were opposed by Health, Education, and Welfare Secretary, Marion B. Folsom, a member of President Eisenhower's Cabinet. If the administration opposes these very mild changes today, it can be understood why the Townsend plan faced bitter opposition from extreme conservative forces during the past 20 or more years.

These mild social-security improvements of 1956 were also bitterly opposed by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Medical Association, the Committee for Constitutional Government, and other big money groups who have been long-time foes of such humanitarian and liberal legislation. Despite such opposition, great advances have been made in the field of social insurance, thanks to Dr. Townsend and other men of vision who were not influenced by deceptive propaganda and scare labels used by opponents of such programs.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasure of attending meetings of Townsend Clubs in my district on a number of occasions. These meetings are attended by many senior citizens of Reading and Berks County. These elderly folks are making a great contribution to the understanding of the problem of the aged. They point to the need for organization and action, particularly by senior citizens, in seeking legislative action to obtain their worthy objective.

Growing numbers of citizens, as a result, now recognize the need for this humanitarian legislation. They believe that people who have contributed a life of service to the Nation have a right to enjoy their twilight years in dignity, self-respect and security.

The Townsendites have taken a keen interest in politics realizing the importance of their ballots in obtaining adequate security legislation that will bring justice to the old folks and prosperity to all.

It is quite proper that we give proper recognition to Dr. Townsend and to his faithful followers for their contribution to the progress that has been made in social insurance. Dr. Townsend is a man of great social vision. He is nearing his 90th birthday but has remarkable energy. He continues to carry on at a great sacrifice to himself for a cause which will eventually triumph.

Dr. Townsend may not live to see his plan, or another which meets the objective he seeks, adopted by the Congress. But he can take pride in knowing that he has played a leading role in easing the burden of millions of old folks and in making life for them more full and happy.

Independence Through Employment—Hire Disabled Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAURENCE CURTIS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, "Independence Through Employment—Hire Disabled Veterans" is the pointed message on an attractive Independence Hall 1956 calendar card recently distributed to some 300,000 employers, under the sponsorship of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped. "Call your public employment office" is the notation above the calendar and below it appears the following words: "Printing costs paid by the Irving J. Phillipson Rehabilitation Fund of the Disabled American Veterans Service Foundation."

Coincidentally, the Chairman of such President's Committee, Melvin J. Maas, major general, United States Marine Corps Reserve, retired—now blind—is the present national commander of the Disabled American Veterans.

A veteran of World War I, World War II, and the Korean conflict, Mel Maas, as he is known to his friends, has, in both these important positions, been successfully emphasizing the advantages to employers of employing handicapped employables, both civilians and veterans, by utilizing their remaining abilities in suitable jobs, which they can just as satisfactorily perform as able-bodied persons, with less time loss because of accidents, absenteeism, or indisposition. Mel believes that the Nation can make no better investment, both from a financial and a humanitarian standpoint, than the money expended in effectuating the physical and vocational rehabilitation of handicapped persons—civilians and veterans—thus enabling them to live in the American way, for which America's disabled defenders have sacrificed much of their bodies and of their health. The DAV and its service foundation have taken an active part in publicizing the need for employment of the physically handicapped.

The DAV Service Foundation is an incorporated trusteeship. One of its principal functions is to see that certain charitable funds of the DAV are properly invested and expended, and also to assist in raising funds. It has been my privilege to serve for some years as a trustee of this foundation together with Gen. Melvin J. Maas, national commander of the DAV. Other trustees are: Gen. George C. Kenney, Lewis L. Clarke, Arthur W. Proctor, and Francis Buono, of New York City, Daniel W. Bell, president of the American Security & Trust Co., in Washington, D. C., Maple T. Harl, director of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., Washington, D. C., Boniface R. Maile, lawyer, of Detroit, Mich., Floyd L. Ming, of Bakersfield, Calif., John L. Golob and James L. Monnahan from Minnesota, and Miles H. Draper, attorney, of Tampa, Fla., who is chairman. The trustees serve for staggered terms, thus assuring continuity of policy.

The foundation's executive secretary, and full-time executive director, is a DAV past national commander and former national service director, Millard W. Rice, with offices located at 631 Pennsylvania Avenue NW., Washington 4, D. C.

The foundation has taken part in the raising of the funds which, under its charter, can be used only for the charitable purposes of the DAV. During the last 7 years it has conducted puzzle contests, which have enabled it to make appropriations to the DAV during that time in the aggregate sum of $2,490,000, in addition to smaller amounts to DAV State departments and units, by reason of localized fund-raising efforts.

Unfortunately, after the DAV Service Foundation established the formula for raising funds by conducting word values puzzle contests, many other organizations, one after another, decided to do likewise, which has thus resulted in diminishing gross and net receipts for the DAV Service Foundation. Its trustees must therefore look for other effective methods of raising substantial funds, so much needed each year by the DAV, to enable it to continue, uninterruptedly, its nationwide setup of full-time experienced trained national service officers, to advise and to assist, each year, scores of thousands of distressed disabled veterans and their dependents, in proving their entitlement to the governmental benefits to which they believe themselves legally and equitably entitled.

Designations in trust agreements, wills, and insurance policies, assignments of stocks and bonds and other properties to the DAV Service Foundation, by disabled veterans, and by social-minded Americans, are greatly needed and highly justifiable, and will be reflected in the humanitarian helping-hand services extended by the DAV to so many disheartened disabled veterans and their dependents, who are thereby converted from community liabilities into community assets.

The future welfare and security of our country is inevitably linked up with the welfare of its disabled war veterans, because America's possible future war veterans will naturally be impressed by the fact that our country does not permit its disabled defenders to become mere forgotten heroes, but enables them to become self-sustaining taxpaying civilians.

Too many of my fellow Americans unfortunately assume, erroneously, that governmental benefits to disabled veterans are automatically awarded, not realizing that more claims are denied by the Veterans' Administration than are allowed.

It is more difficult, ordinarily, for a disabled veteran to prove factual and technical entitlement to the benefits to which he may be justifiably entitled than is the case as to an able-bodied World War II or Korean veteran who may thereby be entitled to some benefits under the so-called GI bill of rights.

When official records fail to substantiate a disabled veteran's claim that his disability originated during his military service, then the burden of proof rests upon him positively to prove his claim, by detailed specific fact-giving affidavit evidence, which, too frequently, becomes exceedingly difficult, if not impossible.

Expert advice is needed by the average disabled veteran claimant, from an experienced service officer—one who knows what is required by the Veterans' Administration under the some 1,000 laws administered by it—to justify favorable adjudication of the claim. Digging into the memory of such a disabled veteran, and of those who have observed the pertinent facts, DAV service officers can frequently persuade them to set forth such facts convincingly and in sufficient detail to establish such technical merit of the discouraged disabled veteran's claim.

It should be obvious that this task cannot be properly performed by an employee of the United States Veterans' Administration, because, in the final analysis, it must act as the judge and the jury and, if the claim is awarded, it must provide the awarded disability compensation, vocational training, medical treatment, etc.

The DAV maintains the largest staff of full-time national service officers, located in the regional offices of the Veterans' Administration throughout the country, of any veteran organization—nearly 200 of them—in addition to about 2,000 part-time and volunteer service officers maintained by its State departments and local chapters.

This nationwide service officer setup is under the jurisdiction of the DAV national director of claims, Capt. Cicero F. Hogan, who has his offices at the DAV national service headquarters at 1701 18th Street NW., Washington 9, D. C.

At such national service headquarters is also located the DAV's national legislative director, Maj. Omer W. Clark, former Deputy Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and, incidentally, chairman of the Disabled Veterans Committee of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped.

A vitally important aspect of the DAV services comes under its national director of employment, John W. Burris, who is also its national civil service officer—also at the same address.

The administrative activities of the DAV come under the jurisdiction of its national adjutant—a wounded marine of World War I—Mr. Vivian D. Corbly, located at the DAV national headquarters, 5555 Ridge Avenue, Cincinnati 13, Ohio.

Under Mr. Corbly also comes the DAV's chief fund-raising project—sending out miniature automobile license tags to automobile owners—as a result of which 125,000 sets of lost keys are each year returned to their owners—without regard as to whether the owners have previously made any contribution for such Idento Tag.

Very unfortunately, only about 20 percent of the recipients of such key insurance idento tags do send back donations to the DAV, but, fortunately, those who have done so have enabled the DAV to maintain its some 200 full-time national service officers.

Every Idento Tag recipient is the owner of an automobile and ought to attach such Idento Tag to his key ring, as a key insurance that his keys if lost would probably be deposited by the finder in some post-office box, whereupon the Post Office would deliver them to the DAV national headquarters, and the DAV would then return the set of keys to its owners—some 125,000 sets being so returned each year. Surely, this nationwide key insurance—which commercially used to cost at least $1 or more—ought to be worthy of a donation of at least $1. The manufacture of these tags is conducted by the DAV at its Idento Tag plant at national headquarters in Cincinnati and furnishes employment for hundreds of disabled veterans and other handicapped people.

A more liberal response by Idento Tag recipients would make the DAV financially able to employ additional very much-needed full-time national service officers in all of the some 166 hospitals maintained by the United States Veterans' Administration throughout the country. There is a great need for them at such hospitals, to advise, counsel, and assist the thousands of hospital patients, first, technically to establish their entitlement to such governmental benefits to which they may be lawfully and equitably entitled; second, to guide them toward physical restoration and vocational rehabilitation; and third, to assist them to become useful, self-sustaining taxpaying civilians.

No charitable donation could bring greater dividend returns, both from a financial and a humanitarian standpoint, to the local communities of these hospitalized disabled veterans than by making it possible for the DAV to give them the helping-hand service that they so sorely need.

Mr. Speaker, Americans who are grateful for the sacrifices of America's disabled defenders, of parts of their bodies or of their health, will generously support the vitally important service program sponsored by the Disabled American Veterans Service Foundation and so effectively operated by the congressionally chartered 36-year-old Disabled American Veterans—DAV.

The Administration Program for Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LESLIE C. ARENDS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to represent a great agriculture district. Naturally, a foremost consideration of mine has been how best to advance the welfare of our farmers, how to solve the problem of accumulated surpluses which depress prices that the farmer may receive his fair share of our national income.

This, I am proud to say, has also been a foremost consideration of the entire Eisenhower Republican administration. The first special message which President Eisenhower submitted to the Congress, following his state-of-the-Union message, was on the farm problem. The Congress had been in session only a week when he urged early action on a nine-point farm program.

Under President Eisenhower's leadership a great deal has been accomplished for the benefit of the American farmer. It was his determined efforts to put into effect a workable program, and the cooperation of the Republicans in Congress, that enables us to review with some pride what has been accomplished during this Congress for the benefit of our farmers.

The Agricultural Act of 1954 was greatly strengthened along lines recommended by the President. The Congress built on an act which, as the President said, "permanently reinforced the foundations of all agriculture." It was apparent, however, early in this session that the unprecedented stocks of surplus food and fiber accumulated from previous farm programs were such a market-disturbing factor that the more economically sound provisions of the 1954 act were prevented from functioning effectively. Therefore, additional legislation was needed to overcome the imbalance between production and consumption.

At the start of this year, farm income had been in an 8-year decline, with the single exception of the Korean war year of 1951, and the farm price parity ratio had been in a 5-year decline. It is true the parity decline had been substantially slowed down in recent months. For example, the parity ratio had declined from 113 in February 1951 to 94 in January 1953—a total decline of 19 points. This contrasted with a decline of only 14 points in the 3 years from January 1953 to January 1956. We were not satisfied with a mere slowing down of the decline which had been under way most rapidly when this administration assumed office. The trend had to be reversed. The President recognized this last January 9 in his message when he pointed out that "for 5 years, the farm economy has declined. Unless corrected, these economic reversals are a direct threat to the welfare of all of our people."

The President's recommendations were, practically point by point, enacted into law, but it was accomplished only by his courage to veto an impractical bill and his insistence that the program be sound. It is unfortunate that in many cases enactment came too late in this session of Congress for the full benefits of the program to be realized by farmers this year. This was because the Democrat-controlled Congress made the farm legislation a political football.

While the farm bill as passed by Congress was not in all respects what the President desired, there has been an economic quickening throughout the agricultural economy as a result of its adoption.

It is gratifying to all of us to note that prices received by American farmers have risen 11 percent since this session of Congress convened last January. The farm price parity ratio for last month stood at 86—a rise of 5 points in 6 months. It is now 1 point higher than a year earlier. This is the first time in over 5 years that the parity ratio was higher than it was a year earlier.

There is every indication that the farm economy has passed the turning point and is definitely headed upward. However, we cannot accomplish miracles overnight. It will take time to work out of the situation that we were a dozen years working into. The important thing is that we are faced in the right direction. Net farm income is currently running half a billion dollars above the level of late 1955. This is the first time in 8 years that net farm income has headed upward, with the single exception of the Korean war year of 1951.

This new strength in the farm economy stems in large part from adoption and implementation of the President's recommendations for constructive agricultural legislation.

This new strength in the farm economy stems in large part from the President's recommendations to tackle the surplus problem head on. This was a courageous effort to correct basic causes underlying the farm maladjustment, not merely to rub salve on symptoms.

Of the many difficulties that aggregate the farm problem—

The President said in his January message—mountainous surpluses overshadow everything else.

It was on his recommendation that this Congress gave the Secretary of Agriculture authority to press surplus disposal programs even more vigorously than before. This year the Department moved $2.7 billion worth of Government-owned commodities into use at home and abroad—more than ever before and 5 times as much as in 1953. In the 3½ years of this administration, over $6 billion worth of surplus commodities have been moved by the Department of Agriculture.

But the farmer's hope does not lie in continued Government disposal of surplus. The farmer is interested in expanding markets and in effective balancing of production and consumption.

On the recommendation of President Eisenhower, the Congress enacted a soil bank. This legislation has far-reaching provisions to correct imbalance between production and consumption, and thus to attack the basic cause of the agricultural income recession. This will be done in such a way as to provide cooperating farmers with income assurance during the years the adjustment is being made. At the same time our great agricultural production resources will be strengthened against the day when this Nation will need increased production of food and fiber. Thus every American will benefit from this forward looking program, whether he be farmer or urban dweller.

That day last January when President Eisenhower first recommended this Congress enact a soil bank, there was agreement among Republicans and some Democrats alike that such legislation was needed. The leadership of both parties in Congress expressed desire for its prompt enactment.

However, it soon became apparent that the soil bank would be delayed substantially because of numerous attempts to load it with crippling amendments. One hundred amendments were offered when the bill was reported to the floor of the Senate. Over forty of them were adopted.

The net effect of these amendments was to produce such a legislative hodgepodge that the President in good conscience could not accept the bill. Some provisions of the first farm bill passed by this Congress would have perpetuated into the future the very arrangement that got agriculture into the mess it was in.

It took political courage for President Eisenhower to veto a farm bill which had been erroneously heralded by its proponents as "the answer to the farm problem."

The ink on the President's veto message was scarcely dry when the overwhelmingly favorable reaction from all parts of the country indicated his good judgment. Principle had dominated politics. Farm and nonfarm people alike rallied behind the Presidential veto. Tens of millions of Americans responded enthusiastically to this manifestation of integrity in Government. The effort to override the veto in Congress failed to achieve even a simple majority.

This Congress is to be congratulated for pitching in again promptly, after veto of the first unworkable farm bill, for hammering out a soil bank bill following the recommendations made by the President last January. It is unfortunate that nearly half a year's delay resulted from the political maneuverings on the first bill. This delay made it impossible to get the soil bank in full operation this year, and cost the farmers hundreds of millions of dollars. For this, the Democratic leadership in Congress alone must accept responsibility.

It is well for us now to review briefly the recommendations made by the President in his January message, and to take stock of what has been done about them.

He asked for—and Congress enacted—a soil-bank law.

He recommended strengthening of the commodity programs. This has been done on a broad front.

He asked for and received extension and enlargement of the special school-milk program.

The President's recommendations for improvement of the Agricultural credit system were approved.

The brucellosis eradication program was enlarged.

A start has been made toward a Great Plains program as recommended by the President in order to maintain a more stable agriculture in an area beset by drought and wind erosion.

Congress approved the President's recommendations for a great expansion of agricultural research to develop new uses for crops, new markets and new crops. Appropriations for research and extension have been increased $43 million since 1953.

Congress followed his recommendation to relieve farmers of the Federal tax on gasoline used on farms. This meant a saving of $60 million annually.

Though the Rural Development program to assist those farm families which benefit little if at all from price support and other programs is going forward, the Congress did not see fit to implement this on the scale recommended by the President.

In the main, thanks to our President's firm leadership, the Congress came fairly close to following the blueprint laid down by the President last January. Bipartisan effort was made to heed the criterion of the President when he said in the message:

Historically agricultural policy in this country has sought to foster family-sized owner-operated farms. This has been a sound and wise policy—not only in the development of an efficient agriculture which has become the envy of the world, but also in fostering a sturdy, resourceful, self-reliant citizenry.

The principle of flexible rather than rigid supports, carried over from the Agricultural Act of 1954, makes it possible for the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out this historic policy. The Secretary demonstrated anew that under this principle, supports can be "flexed" upward as well as downward, depending upon circumstances.

Conditions were such that the Secretary announced that supports would be flexed upward in order to relieve a squeeze on wheat and corn growers and on producers of dairy products. Higher support levels were announced for oats, rye, barley, and grain sorghums.

It is pertinent to note a few additional facts about the farm economy.

More farmers own their farms than ever before in history.

Farm tenancy is at an all-time record low.

Farm foreclosures are near record low.

About 7 out of 10 farmers have no mortgage debt whatever.

Total farm indebtedness is only about 11 percent of the value of farm assets. This is near an all-time low ratio. Indeed, farmers own more cash and bonds than their total indebtedness.

Farms now have more and better machinery than ever before.

More farmers than ever before have electricity and telephones. The REA has aided markedly in this program during the past 3 years.

Farm families have a record high level of living.

New and expanded water management programs have been put into effect under legislation enacted by this administration.

Never before has there been so much soil and water conservation activity on so broad a front as now.

More disaster and drought aid has been extended to farmers during this administration than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, it is easily apparent that the 84th Congress was able to enact such a broad program of constructive legislation for American farmers because of the far-reaching recommendations for legislation made by President Eisenhower during the opening days of the Congress. If it had not been for determined leadership of the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, combined with enlightened demands from our farm leaders in all 48 States, it is doubtful we would have this constructive record on the part of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this Congress has made a real contribution to the welfare of American farmers. I am glad that our program can take some share of responsibility for revising the 8-year downturn in farm income. I am happy that we have in President Eisenhower and in Secretary of Agriculture Benson two outstanding individuals who have the insight and the courage always to place principle before politics. I am proud that a sufficient number of Members of Congress followed their leadership and their recommendations to have enacted into law the constructive measures which they had recommended.

Government Budgeting and Accounting Methods

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PAUL G. ROGERS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I would like to comment on the passage of my bill to revise the governmental budgeting and accounting methods, since I feel that with its passage many progressive steps can be taken in our Government accounting system. As originally introduced, this measure implemented the recommendations of the Second Hoover Commission to revise our governmental accounting methods, estimated by the Commission to save billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money when fully implemented. The bill as I introduced it in the House called for the executive departments and agencies to provide: Budget information on program costs and accomplishments; departmental budgeting on a cost basis; synchronization of organization structure, budget classifications and accounting systems; accounting on an accrual basis; simplification in the subdivision of appropriations of funds; it also contained the provision that Congress make annual appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis, or that Congress could not vote more than the administration planned to spend in any fiscal year.

The bill received the unreserved endorsement of the Government's foremost financial authorities—the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. It was widely supported by many organizations and individuals interested in fiscal reform, and in economy in Government.

While the House Committee on Government Operations deleted one of the major provisions of the bill providing that Congress make annual appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis, it was felt that substantial progress in governmental accounting would be possible by the passage of the amended bill calling for the departments and agencies to start to put their budgets on a cost-based basis and set up their accounts on an accrual basis. The amended bill, as the original bill, received the support of Mr. Percival Brundage, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and in this connection I would like to quote from a letter from Mr. Brundage directed to Senator KENNEDY, who sponsored the bill on the Senate side: "While I favor putting appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis, and believe that legislation to accomplish this should ultimately be enacted, I regard the other sections of your bill to be of such great importance that I would strongly favor the enactment of your bill, even without the section to place appropriations on an annual accrued expenditure basis." Also approving the passage of the amended bill were Mr. J. Harold Stewart, chairman, Hoover Commission Task Force on Budgeting and Accounting; Clarence Francis, chairman, Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report; John Coleman, president, Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Meyer Kesnbaum, special assistant ot the President; and former President Hoover.

I would like at this time to quote a telegram to me from Mr. Clarence Francis, the national chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report: "Thank you for your splendid work on behalf of the Hoover Commission's Budget and Accounting Report. The conference-approved bill will be a major stride in the history of Federal fiscal practice, and lead to important savings. The citizens committee hopes the conference version will be speedily enacted. Please accept our congratulations."

I am keenly interested in seeing all of the Hoover recommendations for budgeting and accounting reforms enacted, and I have already introduced a bill, H. R. 12410, to carry out the deleted provision of our accounting bill, calling for annual appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis, which will give Congress the control it does not now have over the money it appropriates, and which will ultimately result in the savings of many dollars of the taxpayers. I introduced H. R. 12410 at this time in order to clearly set forth the provision which will bring about the annual accrued expenditure budget. It is my plan, if a Member of the 85th Congress, to reintroduce this measure on the first day of the session.

The Great Circle Route

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CARL HINSHAW
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the sound economic development of our State requires that the restrictions on Pan American World Airways' transpacific route be not reimposed, so that it may operate between our Pacific ports and the Orient, over the great circle route.

Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following authorized statement by 23 members of the California delegation; a copy of statement by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, July 23, 1956; and a copy of telegram dated July 24, 1956, from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce:

STATEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIA CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION

The people of California for a century have had a deep interest in commerce with the Orient. The only through one-carrier air service between our State and the Orient has been rendered by Pan American World Airways, which pioneered transpacific operations over 20 years ago.

California and our carrier, Pan American, are now confronted with a problem as to the continuation of this service which is of serious concern to the people of our State. Recent resolutions which we have received from the Chambers of Commerce of San Francisco and Los Angeles illustrate this problem.

Pan American still holds only a temporary authorization, expiring early in 1960, to serve Tokyo, the principal traffic center of the Orient. Northwest Airlines, the other American flag carrier, which provides through one-carrier service to the Middle West and Eastern States also holds only temporary authorization to serve Tokyo which now expires 2 years later in 1962. Both carriers must utilize jet aircraft costing many millions of dollars to provide efficient service beginning in 1960. President Eisenhower decided early in 1955 that neither carrier should have permanent authorization until such time as they had demonstrated they could operate without subsidy.

Our carrier, Pan American, operated without subsidy in 1955 and will again be subsidy free as soon as the archaic restrictions requiring it to fly from its four Pacific coast gateways to Tokyo via a mid-Pacific island are removed and it is permitted to provide our State with short, fast service over the direct route via Seattle.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we urge the President and the Civil Aeronautics Board to now grant our carrier, Pan American World Airways, permanent authority to serve Tokyo. Unless this is done, this carrier cannot be expected to acquire the fleet of jet aircraft at a cost exceeding $50 million which are needed if California's historic position in trade with Japan and other Orient traffic centers served via Tokyo is to be preserved.

STATEMENT, SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, JULY 23, 1956

In 1935, more than 20 years ago, Pan American World Airways inaugurated air transportation across the Pacific to the Orient from California and has been serving the California gateways since that time. It was well aware that the great circle route was by far the shortest one to the Orient and as early as 1931 made aerial surveys of this route. However, because of obstacles of a political character then existing the route was not available to it. For that reason it established its route across the central Pacific via Honolulu, Wake, Guam, and Manila to Hong Kong. In 1946 it was authorized by the United States Civil Aeronautics Board to serve both Tokyo and Shanghai from California but was denied the right to use the great circle route which it then sought even though it is more than 1,000 miles shorter from California to Tokyo. Instead it was confined to the central Pacific route and Northwest Airlines was authorized to use the great circle route for a competing service from the United States to Tokyo. Since that time Pan American has made repeated efforts to be released from the arbitrary Civil Aeronautics Board restriction which requires its Tokyo services from California to stop at a mid-Pacific island en route.

In the most recent proceding the transpacific certificate renewal case of 1953 Pan American's authorization to serve Tokyo was temporarily extended to April 10, 1960. At that time Northwest's authorization was temporarily extended until April 10, 1962. Again, however, Pan American was restricted to the longer central Pacific route.

The proceeding has been reopened by the Civil Aeronautics Board at the direction of the President to determine the single issue of whether Pan American should be authorized to use the great circle route to the Orient.

The question of permanency of the authorization was an issue in the proceeding. However, in a decision by the President only 18 months ago he took the position that the time was not yet appropriate for the issuance of permanent certificates either to Pan American or Northwest for service to and through Tokyo. Rather, it was pointed out that the temporary certificates should run their course and the situation be reviewed in the light of the operating results near the end of the temporary period. Nevertheless, the question has again been raised by a new application filed by Northwest for a permanent certificate and is now pending before the Civil Aeronautics Board.

If a decision is now to be made as to the permanency of the certificates for service to Tokyo there is no question that Pan American, the carrier which pioneered the Pacific routes and which has been serving the United States-Orient traffic for over 21 years, should be given first consideration for permanency. The manifest fairness of this statement is pinpointed by the following facts:

1. Japan generates better than 50 percent of the total United States-Orient traffic.

2. More than 70 percent of this traffic moves through the California gateways.

3. Despite the handicap of restrictions which force Pan American to serve Tokyo by a route more than 1,000 miles longer from California Pan American has been carrying nearly 70 percent of the United States-Tokyo traffic.

It logically follows that any consideration for permanent certification must first apply to the primary gateways and the primary carrier. In this case California and Pan American.

The matter of subsidy is not involved since both Pan American and Northwest were free of subsidy in the Pacific operation during 1955. However, this will not remain a fact with respect to Pan American in the event it is denied the right to use the great circle route to the Orient for its west coast gateways including Portland and Seattle whether the certificates remain temporary or are made permanent.

Northwest alleges that they are faced with a "very real hardship" for lack of permanent operating rights to Tokyo and urges that "money is being invested to promote services on the strength of a temporary certificate. Changes in equipment and services required by the advent of jet aircraft are a very real and pressing possibility. Time delay will cause damage that may well be irreparable." These arguments apply even more forcefully to Pan American. Pan American did not hold back on ordering jet aircraft. It has anticipated the public need by placing orders for such equipment amounting to approximately $243 million including a fleet for its transpacific service at a time when the Tokyo certificates of both carriers were temporary and there was not the slightest indication that one would be extended on a permanent basis without the other. Failure to now grant Pan American a permanent Tokyo certificate while at the same time granting Northwest such permanency would cast such a cloud over Pan American's continuance on the Pacific that in Pan American's case the damage would "be irreparable."

In the postwar years Tokyo has come to occupy the dominating position as the gateway to the Orient. Plainly a carrier excluded from Tokyo or placed under a severe handicap in respect to serving Tokyo and other countries of the Orient through Tokyo would be in a hopelessly inferior position. At the same time, the California gateways which such carrier is serving would suffer from the inferior service to which they thus would be restricted. They could enjoy none of the advantages which true and effective competition can bring to them.

Failure to grant Pan American the great circle route on a certificate of duration equal to that granted Northwest would be manifestly unjust not only to Pan American but the west coast gateways which it serves.

COPY OF TELEGRAM RECEIVED FROM THE LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

JULY 23, 1956.

HON. CARL HINSHAW,
House Office Building:

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce recently actively participated in Civil Aeronautics Board docket No. 5031 known as the reopened Trans Pacific Certificate Renewal case. The proceeding was reopened by the Civil Aeronautics Board at the direction of the President of the United States, to determine the single issue of whether Pan American should be authorized to use the great circle route to the Orient. Pan American inaugurated air service across the Pacific to the Orient from California gateways in 1935 and has provided service since that time. However, Pan American was and has been denied the right to use the great circle to the Orient even though it is more than 1,000 miles shorter to Tokyo via that route. Present route restrictions require Pan American's Tokyo service from California to stop at a mid-Pacific island enroute. These mandatory circuitous routings have caused many passengers who would logically be routed through California gateways to choose other more direct routes. Carriers not serving California gateways advertise this fact, and thereby attract additional traffic away from California gateways.

The California businessman is already at a considerable disadvantage with his competitors for the Japanese and Chinese markets because of great distances involved. Certification of Pan American to serve Tokyo via the great circle route will considerably offset these handicaps. In another docket, No. 7725, presently before the Civil Aeronautics Board, Northwest Airlines, who are presently certified to fly the great circle route to the Orient from Seattle, have applied for permanent authority to serve this route. We take no position as to whether this application should be granted or denied. We feel that is a decision now to be made as to the permanency of the certificate for service to Tokyo from the west coast. There is no question but that Pan American, who has been serving the west coast to Orient traffic for over 21 years, should be given at least equal consideration along with Northwest. Failure to grant Pan American the great circle route on a certificate of duration equal to that granted to any other carrier would be manifestly unjust to Pan American and the west coast gateways it serves. The matter of subsidy is not involved in either proceeding since both Pan American and Northwest Airlines have been free of subsidy in the Pacific operations during and since 1955. However, if present routing restrictions are not lifted and if Pan American is not permitted to fly the shorter great circle route from California gateways via Portland and Seattle to the Orient, it does not appear that they will be able to remain in a competitive position and stay off subsidy.

Tokyo at present occupies the dominant position as the gateway to the Orient. Over 50 percent of the total United States Orient traffic is generated by Japan. More than 70 percent of this traffic moves through California gateways. It logically follows that any consideration for permanent certification should be given to the primary gateways and the carrier handling the traffic, in this instance Pan American. The Civil Aeronautics Board should give favorable consideration toward the permanent certification of this much needed more expeditious air route between California gateways and the Orient, which has already been established as convenient and necessary to the public.

A. O. BECKMAN,
President, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Nelson Poynter and the Congressional Quarterly

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES B. UTT
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Congressional Quarterly has taken some exception to the remarks in my newsletter charging that their evaluation of Members' voting records have carried a noticeable bias.

I had not intended to go into any great detail in the matter—but in view of the Congressional Quarterly's rather strong attack against me of July 26, I believe the people of my district are entitled to know something about that publication and who is back of it.

First, the publication is owned and published by Nelson Poynter, of St. Petersburg, Fla., and it has no official connection with the Congress of the United States. Mr. Poynter is also the owner and publisher of the St. Petersburg Times, a publication which is undeniably New Deal in its sympathies, and certainly in its editorial slanting of the news.

Second, Mr. Poynter is not unknown to the members of the House Un-American Activities Committee, and the official files of that body show that Mr. Poynter is listed as initiating sponsor of the organization known as Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions. The official files show that his name was carried on the letterhead of that committee, and his association with the committee was reported in the Communist Daily Worker of December 24, 1944.

In a separate report entitled "Review of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace Arranged by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions" the Committee on Un-American Activities stated:

The meeting was sponsored by a Communist-front organization known as the National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions. The National Council of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions is a descendant of the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions which was repudiated in 1946 by Harold L. Ickes, its chairman, because of its Communist character.

In August 1945, June Hoffman, representing the cultural section of the Communist Party at its New York State convention, declared proudly:

"We built the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, and it is a great political weapon."

At that same meeting Lionel Berman, husband of Louise Bransten, a known contact of Soviet espionage agents, was praised by the cultural commission of the Communist Party for his role in setting up the ICCASP—Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions.

On August 2, 1948, Louis F. Budenz, former managing editor of the Daily Worker, testified before the Senate Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department as follows:

"The Independent (Citizens) Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions was worked out originally in my office in the Daily Worker. It was worked out by the cultural commission of the Daily Worker, of which Lionel Berman, of the cultural section, organizer of the party, was a member, and he was entrusted not only by that meeting but by the political committee, as the result of these discussions with the task of forming the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions."

I am not implying that Mr. Poynter or his wife are necessarily Communists, Communist sympathizers, or fellow travelers, but it must be admitted by even the most casual observer that they have been keeping "biased" company.

Mr. Poynter's pious protestations of political unbias are clouded seriously by the strong New Deal flavor of his St. Petersburg newspaper and by the fact that files of the House Committee on Un-American Activities reveal that Press Research, a publication also organized and published by Nelson Poynter, was an admittedly biased periodical.

To complete the picture, records indicate that Mr. Poynter served with the Office of War Information under a Democrat administration.

The files of the House Un-American Committee also show that Mr. Poynter was a member of the Political Action Committee and that he arranged with a Mr. C. B. Baldwin, assistant chairman of the PAC of CIO, to give PAC free copies of his publication even though they were prepared for other clients who were paying for the service.

The hearings also contained admissions that the Poynter publication, Press Research, contained the personal opinions of Mr. Poynter and his managing editor. If further evidence than the above is needed to determine Mr. Poynter's strong personal prejudices toward the New Deal philosophy, a look at some of these Press Research reports should satisfy even the most skeptical.

I would not be so concerned over Mr. Poynter's background if his research methods were more accurate and fair. The rollcall votes, however, which he chooses to designate as in support of President Eisenhower are picked by a peculiar formula which is completely arbitrary and open to bias since on some occasions measures proposed by members of the Eisenhower Cabinet are not included, even though they are undeniably a part of the overall Eisenhower program.

Under Poynter's methods, an anti-Eisenhower Democrat may vote for four amendments to a major bill and then vote to kill the bill. According to Mr. Poynter's system of counting, such a Democrat could come out with an 80-percent record in support of the Eisenhower administration, even though he voted to destroy the basic bill sought by the President.

I must also take exception to Congressional Quarterly's Thomas M. Schroth, executive editor of that periodical, when he says that he can predict whether Eisenhower would have voted "yea" or "nay" on each of the 41 rollcall votes he mentioned. Some, as Congressional Quarterly certainly knows, were parliamentary measures which depend for their interpretation on the overall strategy of the leadership for the passage of that particular bill.

In any event, if CQ is claiming to be a "predicting service," it is hard to correlate this with their claim "nothing but the facts." Crystal gazing and factual reports are widely separated journalistic arts.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Poynter nor with Congressional Quarterly so long as they stick to facts and to an accurate job of news reporting; but when they circulate in my district material which is incorrect and which is obviously slanted, I feel that it is my obligation to call to the attention of my constituents something of the background of the men behind this movement and of their methods.

Behavior of American Servicemen Abroad

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, there has been increasing publicity given to the crimes being committed by American servicemen abroad. These stories are injuring American prestige abroad and are causing apprehension in the United States about the criminal tendencies apparently shown by some American youths and concern as to how it will affect the attitude of friendly nations toward us. As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, I have been attempting to find out if these charges have been magnified and learn the true facts of this alarming situation. I have been collecting newspaper clippings and editorials for some time on this subject. These also show a growing apprehension on the part of the American people over the behavior of the American soldiers abroad and how it may affect our country.

At first I intended to get statistics on the number of American servicemen abroad and the number of crimes supposedly committed by them to determine a percentage. I have, in a general way, done this; but since the number of American troops in any locality is classified as secret information, for obvious reasons it would be improper for me to make public these figures. However, I do want to assure you that the number of crimes committed by our American soldiers abroad is, in my opinion, less than crimes committed by the youth of the same age not in the service. If 20,000 American troops in 1 locality have committed no major crimes in a period of several months, it is not news; and naturally it does not make the headlines; but, as soon as 1 American soldier commits a felony, that immediately becomes headlines. It is my sincere belief that with reference to the crimes committed abroad the American people and the people abroad should give equal importance to the fine job being done and the good will displayed by the hundreds and thousands of our American boys abroad.

I do not mean to condone the crimes being committed by American servicemen abroad. It is true that the publicity given these crimes is being used as a pretext by Communist and Fascist factions abroad to force us to bring our American troops home. I am not attempting to discuss our foreign policy and the number of troops that we should have in foreign countries; but I do want to point out some possible actions which the United States can take to cut down the number of crimes committed by our American troops abroad. From investigations which I have made, I believe that the Army, Navy, and Air Force have not used sufficient care in the selection of servicemen for overseas assignments. This carelessness in handling personnel is not new. To my personal knowledge it existed during and after World War II and up until the present time. By proper study, observation, and tests we could eliminate from overseas duty 90 percent of the potential troublemakers that are going to become a part of any Army under the draft system.

As I stated above, I am not trying to comment upon the advisability of the number of American troops abroad; but I do believe that all America has the right to demand that the servicemen we send abroad well represent the best in our way of life. A merchant does not put his poorest and worst merchandise on display; neither should the United States send troublemakers as our emissaries abroad.

It has been my personal experience that a capable company commander can tell almost to a certainty the men in his command who cannot be trusted, and those who are potential troublemakers. We cannot afford to send second-rate servicemen abroad to represent America. To continue to do this is going to bring about a situation whereby public opinion abroad and in America will force the return of our forces abroad.

While many believe that we should bring American servicemen back to the United States, I do not believe any American wants us to do so because of the loss of prestige of our American youth abroad.

All I am asking—and I intend to continue to work toward that goal—is that the United States weed out from overseas duty that very, very small dangerous few that are giving the United States a bad reputation overseas.

The United States World Trade Fair

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. IRWIN D. DAVIDSON
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has approved and thus signed into law my resolution, House Joint Resolution 604, to focus world attention on the United States World Trade Fair. Thus is completed the legislative process which began on April 18, 1956, when I introduced this measure. The bill was at that time referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, under the chairmanship of the Honorable JAMES P. RICHARDS. Because of the committee's work on the Mutual Security Act of 1956, my resolution could not be considered immediately, but I was assured from the start that as soon as the Mutual Security Act had been presented to the House, the way would be clear for the committee to take up and consider my bill.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, Chairman RICHARDS was true to his word and on June 21, 1956, the committee met and unanimously ordered that the resolution be favorably reported to the House. The report was filed on June 28, and on July 16, the House passed the resolution. The bill was then sent to the Senate where it was immediately placed on the Senate calendar, and on July 20 the Senate considered and passed the bill.

As a result of the introduction, passage, and Presidential approval of this bill, the President has been authorized to issue a proclamation inviting the States of the Union and the nations of the world to participate in the fair which is to be held at the New York Coliseum in the district that I represent. The fair will be held in April of 1957.

Mr. Speaker, the interest in this international exposition is great. The Governor of the State of New York has already issued an invitation to 71 nations that they participate. The mayor of the city of New York has issued an official greeting to those who might wish to participate. There will now be added the proclamation of the President of the United States.

This World Trade Fair presents our Nation with a great opportunity. The aim of our foreign-aid programs has always been to lend our friends in the world the economic assistance that they require to become economically self-reliant. By focusing attention on a world marketplace for all of these nations, and by encouraging their participation in it, we develop at the same time the means by which the nations of the world can exhibit and offer for sale their goods and services. The fair will include nine different categories of products, covering some 60 different types of goods.

This method of sustaining our friends and aiding their economies will add to their independence and self-reliance and may eventually lead to the replacement of foreign aid with foreign trade. The nations of the world realize this. Already, the following have agreed to participate in the fair: Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Ceylon, Denmark, Finland, France, West Germany, Great Britain, Greece, India, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Korea, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, and West Berlin, which though not a nation will be accorded equal status with the other participants.

The interest of these nations is for me a strong indication of the fact that we have done a great service in passing House Joint Resolution 604. I am very grateful to all who aided in its passage in the Congress.

Encourage Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PHILIP J. PHILBIN
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, great corporations are getting larger all the time through natural growth, corporate mergers and monopolies, the buying up of small enterprises and reaping the giant's share of the Federal procurement dollar. Small business, the heart of our free-enterprise system, is battling with its back to the wall in many instances for its fair share of profits and growth under an expending American economy.

Small business is presently being squeezed in innumerable ways. Raw materials are hard to get in many fields. A constant rise in labor and material costs is not so easy for small business to absorb as it is for the large corporations; labor problems not so easy to solve. Competition from cheap imports is impossible for small business to meet. Prime defense contracts are the exception for small business. There is a definite lack of subcontracting opportunities for the small-business man. Small business is unable to compete with the large corporations for skilled technical people. Engineers and other skilled professional help are leaving small-business enterprises every day for the attractive wages, working conditions and other inducements offered by big business. Small business is fighting for its very existence.

In the face of these problems, small business is not sharing, in proportion to its productive capacity, in the general prosperity which prevails in most of the country. At this very time when the expanding national economy creates greater demands upon the production facilities of this country, we are faced with an alarming trend of small business failures in an expanding number of fields—automobile dealers are not moving a heavy backlog of cars, some are closing their doors; small retailers have large inventories of alliances and other goods, many are closing up shop; suppliers reflect general conditions in many retail enterprises, and on the whole small business is being pushed to the wall by its larger competitors and by certain governmental policies, or the lack of them.

Mr. Speaker, this is decidedly an unhealthy and threatening atmosphere for small business, especially when the financial pages of our newspapers record almost daily the huge profits of giant corporations while the level of earnings of small corporations is in steady decline.

In the light of present conditions facing small business, the Federal Government should and must take affirmative action to assist this vitally important part of the Nation's economy. There are many areas in which the Government could move effectively to narrow the gap and dissipate the ruthless economic forces that are crushing small business.

One such area is the Government's procurement business. More of it should and can be channeled to small business. That is why I introduced in this Congress H. R. 4380 to require the Department of Defense to set aside up to 20 percent of the total defense procurement solely for small business. In addition, my bill seeks the award of competitive contracts to small business on other than a price basis so as to insure that the full capabilities of small business are utilized to the greatest possible extent in the defense procurement program.

The text of H. R. 4380 is as follows:

A bill to amend the Armed Services Procurement Act of 1947, with respect to the procurement of supplies from small-business concerns

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the Armed Services Procurement Act of 1947 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section, if the agency head determines that such action is advisable in the interest of the national defense in order to make or keep suppliers available for furnishing supplies in the event of a national emergency, or that the interest either of industrial mobilization in case of such an emergency, or of the national defense through maintenance of active research and development, will be served by such action, supplies may be procured on the basis of, and in accordance with, an invitation for bids containing provisions which specify—

"(1) that a part, not exceeding 20 percent, of the total procurement involved when practicable may be withheld from the successful bidder or bidders for distribution among the small-business concerns, not exceeding five, which submit, as to all or such part of the procurement involved as may be specified in the invitation, the lowest bids submitted by small-business concerns; and

"(2) that the part of the total procurement so withheld when practicable may be distributed among such small-business concerns (either by acceptance of the bids made by them or by negotiated purchase or contract) on a basis involving payment to each of a price not in excess of 15 percent above the lowest price paid to a successful bidder."

SEC. 2. Section 4 of such act is amended by inserting after "2 (c)", wherever appearing therein, the following: "or 3 (c)."

SEC. 3. Section 7 (b) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "The power of the agency head to make the determinations or decisions necessary under section 3 (c) shall be delegable only to a chief officer responsible for procurement."

A second bill I have introduced dealing with Government procurement is H. R. 4386, which gives priority to small business for Government contracts when a substantial proportion of the work is done in a labor surplus area. H. R. 4386 reads as follows:

A bill to provide that preference will be given in the awarding of Government procurement contracts to firms which will perform a substantial proportion of the production on such contracts in areas having a surplus of labor

Be it enacted, etc., That before any procurement agency awards a contract to any firm on the basis of its bid or proposal when a substantial proportion of the production on such contract will not be performed in areas classified under Defense Manpower Policy No. 4 (18 F. R. 6995) or any similar rule, regulation, order, or policy, as areas having a current or imminent surplus of labor, such agency shall give an opportunity to match such bid or proposal to firms which submitted bids or proposals on the contract not in excess of 120 percent of the bid or proposal made by the lowest responsible bidder, and which will perform a substantial proportion of the production on such contract in areas so classified. Such opportunity shall be given among such firms first to the small business firm which submitted the lowest bid or proposal, next to the small business firm which submitted the next lowest bid or proposal, and so on until the contract is awarded or until all small business firms among such firms have been given an opportunity to match such bid or proposal. If the contract is not awarded to a small business firm, such opportunity shall be given among such firms to the firm (other than a small business firm) which submitted the lowest bid or proposal; next to the firm (other than a small business firm) which submitted the next lowest bid or proposal; and so on until the contract is awarded or until all such firms have been given an opportunity to match such bid or proposal. If a firm which is given an opportunity to match such bid or proposal matches such bid or proposal, the contract shall be awarded to such firm, unless such firm is not entitled to be awarded the contract for reasons other than the amount of its bid or proposal.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "firm" means an individual, partnership, corporation, company, association, or joint-stock company.

H. R. 4386 would make it possible for small industries in labor surplus areas, which are unsuccessful in obtaining Government contracts because of high bids, to match the successful bid when made by companies outside labor surplus areas. Preference would be given to small-business firms who came closest to the low bid when the original bids were submitted. The net effect would be to reinstate the match bid regulations in effect for a short time prior to the Korean war in favor of distressed areas which spread a substantial part of this huge business among smaller units.

Under the present regulations to help labor surplus areas, the Federal Government has this to offer: "There is plenty of Government business; all you have to do is go out and get it." That advice might help the unemployment problem of large cities with many diversified industries. But in the case of small communities, dependent upon one or a few major industries for annual payrolls, the assistance of the Federal Government leaves much to be desired. Small business does not seek special favors and special privileges. But it protests against a situation which permits special favors and special privileges to huge corporations.

Another area in which the Federal Government could provide definite help to small business is through tax incentives. In cooperation with the Smaller Business Association of New England, I have sponsored several tax bills in the 84th Congress to assist small business.

One of these measures is H. R. 4381, which provides that the allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered that is deductible as a trade or business expense shall not be considered unreasonable if not in excess of amounts paid in similar enterprises even though in excess of sums paid or salaries and compensation by the taxpayer in previous years.

This legislation would make it possible for small business to meet the big corporations on more even ground in holding on to key professional and technical corporation officers and employees. The text of H. R. 4381 follows:

A bill to clarify the deduction for income-tax purposes of allowances for salaries or other compensation for personal services

Be it enacted, etc., That section 23 (a) (1) (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to deductions allowed for income taxes) is hereby amended by adding at the end of said subsection the following: "An allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered shall not be considered unreasonable if it is not in excess of salaries or other compensation paid by others engaged in similar enterprises or businesses similar to the taxpayer's in the same taxable year for similar services rendered, even though it is in excess of the sums paid for salaries and other compensation by the taxpayer in earlier years."

Another bill is H. R. 4382, which allows a deduction up to $25,000 from the gross income of corporations for amounts actually expended during the taxable year for capital expenditures or other corporation purposes.

Testimony presented to the House and Senate Small Business committees confirms the need for this desirable legislation to help small business. Under the present tax structure, it is almost impossible for small business to accumulate additional working capital to permit even a minimum expectancy of expansion.

No matter how much small business tries to lay aside enough earnings to make the investments and take the gambles that must be taken in research and development work, the tax load beats the small enterprise at every turn.

H. R. 4382, by exempting the first $25,000 spent on capital improvements, represents a step in the right direction in helping small business taxwise. It would help correct some of the evils which are strangling small business enterprise and initiative.

The heavy tax load on small business is a definite handicap to normal development and growth, so much so that it represents a real threat to the American economy. H. R. 4382, the text of which follows, would ease the tax burden of small business:

A bill to allow an exemption of $25,000 corporate income taxes on corporations which has been expended by the corporation for capital expenditures

Be it enacted, etc., That section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by inserting at the end thereof the following to be known as subsection (bb).

"(bb) Increase of capital assets by corporations: In the case of a corporation and notwithstanding any of the provisions of section 24 of the Internal Revenue Code, and after all other allowances permitted under this section such sum, not exceeding $25,000, as has actually been expended during the taxable year for its own capital expenditures or for other corporate purposes."

Another bill, H. R. 4388, which I introduced in the House in cooperation with the Smaller Business Association of New England, is similar to H. R. 4382 with regard to the $25,000 exemption. It has an added provision making the combined normal tax and surtax rate of 38 percent applicable to corporations having taxable incomes of less than $50,000. The text of H. R. 4388 is as follows:

A bill to allow to corporations an exemption of $25,000 for income-tax purposes, and to provide that the combined normal tax and surtax rate of 38 percent shall be applicable to corporations having taxable incomes of less than $50,000

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to normal tax on corporations) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation (except a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 14 or section 231 (a), supplement G, or supplement Q) a tax of 24 percent of the amount of the normal-tax net income in excess of $25,000."

SEC. 2. Section 14 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to tax on corporations with normal-tax net incomes of not more than $25,000) is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. Section 14 (c) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to tax of foreign corporations engaged in trade or business within the United States) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) In the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States, the tax shall be an amount equal to 24 percent of the normal-tax net income."

SEC. 4. Section 15 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to surtax on corporations) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the corporation surtax net income of every corporation (except a Western Hemisphere trade corporation as defined in section 109, and except a corporation subject to a tax imposed by section 231 (a), supplement G or supplement Q) a surtax of 14 percent of the amount of the corporation surtax net income in excess of $25,000."

SEC. 5. The amendments made by this act shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1949.

Early in the second session of the 84th Congress, I introduced, in legislative form, another tax proposal of the Smaller Business Association of New England. This bill is H. R. 8850, which increases from the present $25,000 to $50,000 the amount exempted from the surtax on corporate taxable income. This bill would also permit corporations with income tax liability for a taxable year of less than $100,000 to pay its tax in four equal installments. The text of H. R. 8850 is as follows:

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to increase the amount exempted from the surtax on corporate taxable income from $25,000 to $50,000, and to permit a corporation with income tax liability for a taxable year of less than $100,000 to elect to pay its tax in four equal installments.

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 11 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to surtax on corporations) is hereby amended by striking out "$25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

(b) Paragraph (7) of section 12 of such code (relating to cross references to the tax on corporations) is hereby amended by striking out "$25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

(c) Section 821 (a) (1) (B) of such code (relating to surtax on certain mutual insurance companies) is hereby amended by striking out "$25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

(d) Section 821 (b) (2) of such code (relating to surtax on certain interinsurers) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(2) Surtax: A surtax of 22 percent of the mutual insurance company taxable income (computed as provided in subsection (a) (1)) in excess of $50,000."

(e) The first sentence of section 1551 of such code (relating to disallowance of surtax exemption and accumulated earnings credit) is hereby amended by striking out $25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

SEC. 2. Section 6152 (a) (1) of such code (relating to election by corporations to pay income taxes in installments) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) Corporations: A corporation subject to the taxes imposed by chapter 1 may elect to pay the unpaid amount of such taxes—

"(A) in two equal installments, if the amount of the taxes imposed by chapter 1 for the taxable year (reduced by the credits against tax provided by pt. IV of subch. A of ch. 1) is $100,000 or more; or

"(B) in four equal installments, if the amount of taxes imposed by chapter 1 for the taxable year (reduced by the credits against tax provided by pt. IV of subch. A of ch. 1) is less than $100,000."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by the first section of this act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1955. The amendment made by section 2 of this act shall apply with respect to payments of tax for taxable years ending after the day on which this act is enacted.

The Federal Government should offer every measure of protection and encouragement to small business. The bills which I have enumerated represent a few of the corrective remedies which are required to help small-business units throughout the country. There are many others, which would do much to restore a more wholesome and healthy climate than that surrounding small business at the present time.

The growth, vitality, and vigor of small business are the strength and prosperity of our great Nation. Let us promote better opportunities and more equitable conditions for this vital segment of our American economy. If we do not, the system of free private enterprise will be endangered, weakened, and damaged to the extent that our country will be left open to the machinations of those who would destroy American business, big and small.

Let us be just and fair to all American business when it is legitimate and lawful and socially aware of its responsibilities to the Nation and the American people. But let us be vigilant and willing to act in order to insure for small business its opportunity to live and to enjoy its rightful share in the national prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a recent article appearing in the Boston Herald written by William F. Homer, Jr., on small business.

The article follows:

SMALL BUSINESS FALLS BEHIND BIG COMPETITORS IN PROFITS

(By William F. Homer, Jr.)

The record-breaking profits of big business are not being enjoyed on the same scale by the 4,200,000 small-business firms of the Nation, about 60,000 of which are in New England.

These little fellows, or many of them, are experiencing acute profit problems. They are confronted with static or lower sales, and more and more mergers in the profit squeeze.

There is the highest failure rate for industry in 15 years of 46 for each 10,000 firms. The average liability in bankruptcies for 1955 was down around $40,000.

Of course there are more companies now than ever, and some of them are bound to stumble. But New England industry leaders find five principal small business headaches which curdle the milk and honey of profit. They are: (1) management; (2) taxes; (3) financing; (4) labor; (5) costs.

What is small business, since we're talking about it? The cynics used to have a word for it.

"Business is small if it can't afford a lobbyist in Washington."

The serious rule of thumb was a firm with less than 500 workers independently owned and operated.

Currently, the popular version holds that small business is the firm that says yes in a merger. And on a statistical basis, the 1,100 members of the Smaller Business Association of New England adopt a more flexible approach.

They look at the industry itself. A 150-man diamond tool shop could be big. An 800-worker tire plant, by Akron standards, can be small.

SUBCONTRACTING DIPS

But big or small, the volume of subcontracting that came to postwar New England, when consumer goods and materials were scarce, has vanished. Industry giants now do the farmed-out work themselves to help meet overhead.

In Government contracts, industrialists say, the line of least resistance leads to the big company. Small company ingenuity bows to large company assets in atoning for promises not performed. The national Small Business Association now carries the fight to get defense contract set-asides for small firms, after it rules on their competency.

This is one object of SBA, explains Edward J. Stewart, regional director. The others are to advise on technical and management problems and to give financial aid when other sources refuse.

Since its founding in 1953 to April 1956, the New England SBA office has made about 75 of these loans in a total of more than $3 million Stewart declares.

On a State basis, Massachusetts Business Development Corp., concentrating on financial not development aid to small business, has made 62 loans for $9,157,000 in approximately the same period.

These are all to the good, businessmen agree. The trouble is that they are not enough to make up for the tax drain on working capital and the high cost of replacing equipment.

NO COLOR LINE

Don't think that all small business writes in red ink, and all big business in black. There is no clear color line. But little business, profitwise, has not kept pace with big. In 1955, the profit margin before taxes for the giants of $100 million or more assets, was 13.4 percent. For manufacturing firms with less than $250,000 resources, it was 2.6 percent of sales.

Stewart agrees with S. Abbot Smith, member of the board of advisers of SBA and former president of the Smaller Business Association of New England, that rising money rates put the clamp on the small business borrower who can't meet the higher loans cost or finds his bank "lines" cut off.

They concur that the upsurge of fringe benefits and wage-guaranty plans puts an added burden on starting new small enterprise or continuing the old.

"Lack of management ability is the biggest single cause of small business folding," Stewart insists.

"Good management is essential, but it's no good if companies do not get the financing for reserves, replacement or growth," Smith adds. "This financial middle ground is a big cause of failures. Companies have grown beyond the point where they can finance themselves. They're not big enough, too risky, to go on the stock exchanges. It's hard to attract money to them. A wealthy man would be better off buying tax-exempts.

"If the company makes any money, the Government takes 52 percent of it in corporation taxes," Smith continues. This makes the Government what Joseph D. Noonan, executive secretary of the New England association, calls a "majority partner." This is the basis for the graduated business tax provisions of the current Patman act.

SCANT RESERVES

This tax bite means scant reserves set aside in good times for harsher weather. It means a squeeze to replace a machine that cost $7,000 originally with an improved model that costs $18,000 some 15 years later.

"The small company cannct carry a big inventory," Smith explains. "It has to buy materials at a higher price than large firms and sell goods competitively at the same price. When materials become scarce, suppliers cut off the least important companies first. Then they're up against a scarcity squeeze and a price squeeze as big companies continue to hold the price line, with a typical 5 months inventory to work on."

"It's harder for the small company to hold skilled labor," Smith, a wallpaper manufacturer, adds. He calls "unbelievable" the salaries paid technical men, figuratively "stolen right out of their previous plants."

"Don't forget," he concludes, "that small business still has advantages. It can move fast. It offers quick opportunity for ingenuity—the New England machine shop. It gives a well-rounded business training. Good management on good products can pay off rapidly. Finally, a man can be his own boss and build an equity for himself and his family.

"Yet under present tax and financing inequities, some big industries run three shifts. Well managed small competitors run not at all."

Keynote Speech of Congressman William L. Springer Before the Indiana State Republican Convention, June 27, 1956

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. HALLECK

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, on June 27, 1956, our colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] made the keynote speech before the Indiana State Republican Convention.

In view of this fact, I felt sure the Members of the House would be interested in what he said on that occasion. Under unanimous consent, I append herewith the speech made on that occasion in full:

Mr. Chairman, fellow candidates in 1956, delegates to this convention, and my Republican friends, this convention convenes again in the spirit of this great Republic, to declare your principles in a party platform, to nominate the candidates to high office who shall serve you both at home and in Washington, and to reassert your confidence in the administration of the greatest President within our lifetime.

From him, and all of his administration in Washington, I bring you personal greetings and best wishes for a successful convention and for the election of all of your State and National candidates this fall.

I cannot think of Indiana without this personal note of fond recollection. Here I was born and grew to manhood. Some of my first boyhood friends and college classmates are among you here today. My father and mother are hallowed in your ground—as are their parents before them. And dear ones of my family still reside among you. I could not look out upon this audience without thoughts of long ago.

I now live among the finest people in the world, but I can look back upon my former association with friends in Indiana with long and abundant affection.

The Indiana Republican State convention is a time when old friends return to Indianapolis to renew ties with the party. There are among you many old delegates who have seen service in the party wars of yesteryear. I see also those who are probably coming to this convention for the first time and will be here years hence when many of you have handed over the reins of party leadership.

Just 24 years ago, I walked through the portals of this building for the last time as a delegate to this convention from Sullivan County. The keynote speaker on that occasion was the late Will Hays. I can remember his words as if it were only yesterday when he said:

"Hoosiers are friendly people. No matter where you may roam, when a Hoosier meets a fellow Hoosier, it is time to sit and have a friendly chat."

In the past few years, I have travelled over much of the globe, and it seems that regardless of where I am, I always manage to meet a transplanted Hoosier. In connection with this gregarious and friendly trait among your people, I am reminded of thse lines of Rupert Brooke in speaking of his beloved England:

"If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England.

* * * * *

Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
And laughter learnt of friends, and gentleness."

You who have gathered here today are reflecting on the significance of the Republican Party in 1956 on the life of the State and the Nation. In any democracy, we must have a theory about the principles which make it up. One theory given us in the wisdom of our founding fathers was that every 4 years the President should return to the people with an accounting of his stewardship and ask for a vote of confidence in his actions and his policies. So, in 1956, the Eisenhower administration returns to the people for an approval of its actions during the last 4 years.

This is only fair—it is only just—it is only right—that we do so.

Not within my lifetime has a Republican administration been able to return to the people with such a record of accomplishment—either in the White House or in the Congress. We should be shouting from every street corner about this great record. Never has a party had a better record or a better program to stand on. All recent polls indicate that this Republican administration in Washington is approved by a solid majority of the American people.

If we are to give an accounting of this stewardship, what have we done during the past 4 years?

Let us look at the situation in Washington in 1953 when the Republicans were returned to power:

I. There was a shooting war in Korea: Between 1945 and 1953, in the short space of 7 years, 600 million people had disappeared behind the Iron Curtain.

There were hot spots all over the world, any one of which could have involved us in a war.

After just 3 years in the White House, this administration is in this situation:

We have finished the war in Korea and we are firmly at peace for the first time since 1940.

By wisely allying ourselves with friends in Europe and Asia, we have brought about an increased military strength to the entire free world and we are able to meet and defeat any aggressor, wherever he might appear.

In my estimation, this was the major issue before the American people when they went to the polls in 1952. I leave it to your best judgment as to whether or not this administration has performed on its promise to end the Korean war and to keep ourselves strong enough that no aggressor, nor combination of aggressors, can bring on world war III.

II. When the people of America went to the polls in 1952, they were conscious that during recent years there had been scandal and dishonesty which had run rampant through the Truman administration from 1948 on.

I would like to recall for just a moment some of the headlines of 1952. Here they are:

December 1951: New Scandals in the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

January 1952: House Judiciary Votes Investigation of Department of Justice.

March 1952: Newbold Morris Called In To Clean Up Mess.

April 2, 1952: Morris, McGrath, and Truman Clash.

April 3, 1952: McGrath Fires Morris, Truman Fires McGrath.

April 4, 1952: McGrath Tells McGranery, "Bring a Pair of Asbestos Trousers With You."

I don't know what you people called it in Indiana, but in Washington we termed it the "Scandal-a-Day Administration."

In the past 3 years, what have we and the President in Washington done about this mess?

First of all, we got rid of the questionable people in high places who were making possible this corruption and we replaced crook-and-crony rule by able and honest administration.

I am not contending that all of the honest people are in the Republican Party. That is not the test of a successful and honest administration. The test is—when these crooks arise in high places, the President meets the person and the issue head on and removes them from Government. This is what I charge the Truman administration failed to do. This is what I assert the Eisenhower administration has done on every occasion where ethical standards have been tested.

On the issue of honesty in Government, I believe that the policies of the Eisenhower administration have received the substantial approval of people everywhere.

III. When the people of this country went to the polls in 1952, there was great uneasiness and serious lack of confidence in the ability of the previous administration to deal effectively with the question of the internal security of the United States. Some of this had been brought about by its record of negligence in the Hiss case, the White case, and many others which could be named. There had been a failure on the part of the previous administration to follow the reports and the findings of the Federal Bureau of Investigation as to the danger of Communist infiltration into high places in Government.

What is the record of President Eisenhower on this point? First, he tightened the security standards not only for those who might be involved in a Communist conspiracy against the United States, but also set up standards which removed from Government those weaklings who might be subject to indecision when confronted with the question of making a choice between their Government and their own advancement.
